REVISED SECOND EDITION

- 250,000 words, phrases, and definitions

THE WORLD'S MOST TRUSTED DICTIONARIES

Oxford University Press is a department of the University of Oxford. It furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education in its worldwide publishing. The preparation of dictionaries, of all types and for all ages, has been a central part of its activities for more than 100 years.

What makes Oxford dictionaries unique?

Oxford's reputation as the world's leading dictionary-maker is founded on the Oxford English Dictionary, 'the greatest dictionary in any language'. It is an unsurpassed guide to the meaning, history, and pronunciation of over half a million words, covering both current and historical usage. It defines the language of the entire English-speaking world, from North America to South Africa, from Australia and New Zealand to the Caribbean.

The Oxford English Corpus

How are the words of our language actually used? What are the most frequently used meanings of common words? To answer such questions accurately, Oxford lexicographers use the Oxford English Corpus, an unrivaled balanced collection of hundreds of millions of words of text representing every kind of writing and speech.

Preface

This book is a fully integrated reference book, a 'dictionary in depth', which combines within a single volume the breadth of information one would expect to find in a dictionary of current English together with greater depth of information than is normal in a dictionary. The dictionary text is based on the Concise Oxford Dictionary (8th edition), substantially updated and revised to take account of changes and developments in the language, including the addition of around 3,000 new words and senses. Coverage of scientific and technical vocabulary in particular has been greatly extended and approximately 1,000 new words and senses have been added from these fields.

An important feature of this book is the explanatory coverage of specific subjects, concepts, movements, events, etc., which are normally given only very brief treatment (if any) in conventional dictionaries, but here are presented as concise and self-contained articles following the dictionary entry, be it on Marxism, black holes, existentialism, computers, dinosaurs, post-modernism, Buddhism, American football, or the Gaelic language.

In addition there are around 4,000 biographical entries, just under 5,000 place-name entries, and more than 4,000 other proper names. The biographies represent a wide-ranging selection of figures of international importance, both historical and contemporary. As well as giving the important facts about a person's life and work, the entries provide information which puts in a wider context the life and achievements of that person and his or her overall importance within a particular field or historical period. The entries for place-names are based on David Munro's Oxford Dictionary of the World. They not only identify and locate the place in question and give population figures; they also provide information about the character of the place and its historical, economic, or political importance. Longer articles are provided for countries and major regions and cities. The other proper-name entries cover a wide range of topics, and include, for example, entries on political parties, religious organizations, historical events, treaties and Acts of Parliament, celestial bodies, and mythological and fictional characters.

The aim of the editors has been to provide not merely a dictionary, but a handy single-volume reference work that will serve as an index to the words, names, and concepts that are of importance in the English-speaking world. The style of entries is designed to be not only factually accurate and informative but also interesting and readable: with this aim in mind abbreviations and special signs and symbols have been kept to a minimum.

Additional useful information presented in tabular or diagrammatic form is provided in the Appendices. Great care has been taken to ensure that the contents of the Appendices are integrated with the main text of the dictionary, so that the two sources of information can be used to complement one another. In particular there is a comprehensive Chronology of World Events from prehistoric times to the present day; in most cases more detailed information on the events, people, etc. listed there can be found in their own entries in the dictionary.

The editors would like to thank all those who helped in the preparation of this book; those not listed as part of the project team who deserve special mention include: Joanna Tulloch and Jeremy Marshall, for advisory reading and useful comments and suggestions on all aspects of the text; Michael Proffitt and Georgia Hole, for research on and drafting of new word entries; Ann Lackie and Hazel Wright, for critical reading of the whole text; Della Thompson, for help in revision and updating of the dictionary text; and Andrew Hodgson, for assistance in incorporation of changes and revisions.

Guide to the Use of This Dictionary

The Oxford English Reference Dictionary is designed to be as straightforward and self-explanatory as possible and the use of special conventions has been kept to a minimum. The following notes will enable the reader to understand more fully the principles involved in assembling the information.

1. HEADWORD

The headword is printed in large bold roman type, or in large bold italic type if the word is originally a foreign word and not naturalized in English.

granary /ˈgrænərɪ/ n. (pl. -ies) 1 a storehouse for threshed grain. 2 a region producing, and esp. exporting, much corn. 3 propr. a type of brown bread or flour containing whole grains of wheat (granary bread). [L granarium f. granum grain]

comme il faut /ˌkɒm iːl ˈfəʊ/ adj. & adv. ● predic.adj. (esp. of behaviour, etiquette, etc.) proper, correct. ● adv. properly, correctly. [F, = as is necessary]

Order of headwords

- Strict alphabetical order is followed even when the headword consists of more than one word or of a hyphenated word (see also Form of headwords below).
- Capitalized headwords come before lower-case headwords of the same spelling.

Gable /ˈgeɪb(ə)l/, (William) Clark (1901–60), American actor. He became famous through his numerous roles in Hollywood films of the 1930s; they include It Happened One Night (1934), for which he won an Oscar, and Gone with the Wind (1939), in which he starred as Rhett Butler.

gable /ˈgeɪb(ə)l/ n. 1 a the triangular upper part of a wall at the end of a ridged roof. b (in full gable-end) a gable-topped wall. 2 a gable-shaped canopy over a window or door. □ gabled adj. (also in comb.). [ME gable f. ON gafl]

- Numerals in headwords take precedence over letters in ordering.

Charles XII /tʃɑːlz/ (also Karl XII /kɑːl/) (1682–1718), king of Sweden 1697–1718.

Charles Martel /mɑːˈtel/ (*c.*688–741), Frankish ruler of the eastern part of the Frankish kingdom from 715 and the whole kingdom from 719.

- Headwords consisting of more than one word where the main headword has been reversed (as in Versailles, Treaty of, Andrew, St, and Edward, Lake; see Form of headwords below) are listed after headwords with numerals.

Charles XII /tʃɑːlz/ (also Karl XII /kɑːl/) (1682–1718), king of Sweden 1697–1718.

Charles, Prince /ˈtʃɔːlz/, Charles Philip Arthur George, Prince of Wales (b.1948), heir apparent to Elizabeth II.

Charles Martel /mɑːˈtel/ (*c.*688–741), Frankish ruler of the eastern part of the Frankish kingdom from 715 and the whole kingdom from 719.

Form of headwords

- In biographical entries the surname of the person forms the main headword, except where the person is better known or only known by a Christian name, title, sobriquet, etc. (e.g. Anne of Cleves, Henry IV).
- Main headwords consisting of more than one word are entered in the alphabetical place deemed to be most helpful to the user, which may not always correspond to the alphabetical place of the first word. Thus the main entry for Treaty of Versailles is entered under 'V' not 'T' and the headword becomes Versailles, Treaty of, while St Andrew and Lake Edward are entered as Andrew, St and Edward, Lake (see also Order of headwords above).

Variant spellings

Any variant spellings or forms are given at the main headword, in bold type in brackets before the definition. They are also given their own headword entry and cross-reference when these are more than three entries away from the main headword. The main headword represents the preferred form in British usage.

phoney /ˈfəʊnɪ/ adj. & n. (also phony) colloq. ● adj. (phonier, phoniest) 1 sham; counterfeit. 2 fictitious; fraudulent. ● n. (pl. -eys or -ies) a phoney person or thing. □ phonily adv. phoniness n. [20th c.: orig. unkn.]

phony var. of PHONEY.

charleston /ˈtʃɑːlstən/ n. & v. (also Charleston) ● n. a lively American dance of the 1920s with side-kicks from the knee. ● v.intr. dance the charleston. [CHARLESTON 2]

- If the variant spelling or form applies only to one sense or part of an entry it will appear at that sense or part of the entry.

alpine /ˈælpaɪn/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 a of or relating to high mountains. b growing or found on high mountains. 2 (Alpine) of or relating to the Alps. 3 (Alpine) (of skiing) involving fast downhill work. ● n. a plant native to mountain districts, esp. one suited to rock gardens. [L Alpinus: see ALP]

Bohemian /bəʊˈhiːmɪən/ n. & adj. ● n. 1 a native of Bohemia, a Czech. 2 (also bohemian) a socially unconventional person, esp. an artist or writer. ● adj. 1 of, relating to, or characteristic of Bohemia or its people. 2 socially unconventional. □ bohemianism n. (in sense 2). [BOHEMIA + -AN: sense 2 f. F bohémien gypsy]

- Variant spellings used in the US (and often in other places where US rather than British spelling conventions are followed) are introduced by the restrictive label US.

catalogue /ˈkætəˌlɒg/ n. & v. (US catalog) ● n. 1 a complete list of items (e.g. articles for sale, books held by a library), usu. in alphabetical or other systematic order and often with a description of each. 2 an extensive list (a catalogue of crimes). 3 US a university course-list etc. ● v.tr. (catalogues, catalogued, cataloguing; US catalogs, cataloged, cataloging) 1 make a catalogue of. 2 enter in a catalogue. □ cataloguer n. (US cataloger). [F f. LL catalogus f. Gk. katalogos f. katalegō enrol (as CATA-, legō choose)]

- Variant spellings or forms of place-names are introduced by a language label where appropriate.

Geneva /dʒɪ'ni:və/ (French Genève /ʒənɛv/) a city in SW Switzerland, on Lake Geneva; pop. (1990) 167,200.

- Pronunciations of variants are given (at the main headword) where they differ significantly from the pronunciation of the headword. Where the variant form or spelling has a restrictive language label the extra pronunciation given represents the standard pronunciation in that language. (See also section 5 below.)

Archangel /'ɑ:kˌeɪndʒəl/ (Russian Arkhangelsk /ar'xangjiljsk/) a port of NW Russia, on the White Sea; pop. (1990) 419,000.

Alternative names

Alternative names or forms are given at the main headword. They are also given their own headword entry and cross-reference when these are more than three entries away from the main headword. Pronunciation, where appropriate, will be given at the cross-reference entry, not at the main headword. The main headword represents the usual preferred form in British usage. The placing of alternative names depends to a large extent on the context, but the general guidelines are as follows:

- Alternative names in place-name entries are given in italics in brackets before the definition, preceded either by 'also called', or by 'called in Italian' etc. where the alternative name represents the usual form in the given language. Alternative names needing more explanation may also be introduced in the text.

Black Forest (called in German Schwarzwald) a hilly wooded region of SW Germany, lying to the east of the Rhine valley.

Schwarzwald /'ʃvartsvalt/ the German name for the BLACK FOREST.

Galilee, Sea of (also called Lake Tiberias, Lake Kinneret) a lake in northern Israel. The River Jordan flows through it from north to south.

Tiberias, Lake /taɪ'bɪərɪəs/ an alternative name for the Sea of Galilee (see GALILEE, SEA OF).

- Alternative names in scientific, especially zoological and botanical, entries are given in italics in brackets, usually at the end of the definition.

apatosaurus /əˌpætə'sɔ:rəs/ n. a huge plant-eating dinosaur of the genus Apatosaurus (formerly Brontosaurus), of the Jurassic and Cretaceous periods, with a long whiplike tail and trunklike legs. Also called brontosaurus. [mod.L f. Gk apatē deceit + sauros lizard]

- Alternative names in biographical entries are given in brackets in roman before the definition, introduced by 'known as'.

Frederick II /'fredrɪk/ (known as Frederick the Great) (1712–86), king of Prussia 1740–86.

Abbreviations

Commonly used abbreviations are included at the main headword entry for the full form, in bold, preceded by 'abbr.', with a cross-reference from the abbreviation to the main entry.

African National Congress (abbr. ANC) a South African political party and black nationalist organization, founded in 1912 with the aim of securing racial equality and black representation in Parliament.

ANC see AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

Homographs

Words that are different in origin but spelt the same way (called homographs) are treated as separate headwords, distinguished by superscript numbers immediately following the headword. Each homograph is given a separate pronunciation.

chase^1 /tʃeɪs/ v. & n. ● v. 1 tr. pursue in order to catch. 2 tr. (foll. by from, out of, to, etc.) drive. 3 intr. a (foll. by after) hurry in pursuit of (a person). b (foll. by round etc.) colloq. act or move about hurriedly. 4 tr. (usu. foll. by up) colloq. pursue (overdue work, payment, etc. or the person responsible for it). 5 tr. colloq. a try to attain. b court persistently and openly. ● n. 1 pursuit. 2 unenclosed hunting-land. 3 (prec. by the) hunting, esp. as a sport. 4 an animal etc. that is pursued. 5 = STEEPLECHASE. □ go and chase oneself (usu. in imper.) colloq. depart. [ME f. OF chace chacier, ult. f. L capere take] chase^2 /tʃeɪs/ v.tr. emboss or engrave (metal). [app. f. earlier enchase f. F enchasser enshrine, set (as EN-^{1}, CASE^2)] chase^3 /tʃeɪs/ n. Printing a metal frame holding composed type. [F châsse f. L capsa CASE^2]

chase^4 /tʃeɪs/ n. 1 the part of a gun enclosing the bore. 2 a trench or groove cut to receive a pipe etc. [F chas enclosed space f. Prov. ca(u)s f. med.L capsum thorax]

- Biographical entries dealing with different people of the same name are treated as separate homographs and are alphabetically ordered by forename (see also section 2 below).

Burke^1 /bɜ:k/, Edmund (1729–97), British man of letters and Whig politician.

Burke^2 /bɜ:k/, John (1787–1848), Irish genealogical and heraldic writer.

- Geographical entries dealing with places of the same name are treated within the same entry.

Cambridge /'keɪmbrɪdʒ/ 1 a city in eastern England, the county town of Cambridgeshire; pop. (1991) 95,682. Cambridge University is located there. 2 a city in eastern Massachusetts, forming part of the conurbation of Boston; pop. (1990) 95,800. Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology are located there.

2. BIOGRAPHICAL ENTRIES

Biographical entries follow place-name entries of the same spelling.

Names

- Forenames which are not widely known or used are given in brackets and are discounted for purposes of alphabetical ordering. A similar practice is used to indicate that a person's initials are better known than his or her full forenames.

Bader /'bɑ:də(r)/, Sir Douglas (Robert Steuart) (1910–82), British airman.

Auden /'ɔ:d(ə)n/, W(ystan) H(ugh) (1907–73), British-born poet.

- Nicknames and shortened forms of forenames are given in brackets after other forenames.

Weissmuller /'waɪsˌmʊlə(r)/, John Peter ('Johnny') (1904–84), American swimmer and actor.

- Nicknames, bynames, and alternative names which substitute for a person's full name are given in brackets after forenames, preceded by the words 'known as'. Such names are given their own headword entry and cross-reference where they are more than three entries away from the main headword.

Peter I /'pi:tə(r)/ (known as Peter the Great) (1672–1725), tsar of Russia 1682–1725.

Bismarck^2 /'bɪzmɑ:k/, Otto (Eduard Leopold) von, Prince of Bismarck, Duke of Lauenburg (known as 'the Iron Chancellor') (1815–98), German statesman.

Iron Chancellor the nickname of Bismarck after he used the phrase 'blood and iron' in a speech in 1862, referring to war as an instrument of foreign policy.

- Full names, names in other languages, etc. are given in brackets following the forenames as appropriate.
- The term 'born' is used when a person has changed his or her name or is normally known by a title or name other than the one he or she was born with. The introductions 'pseudonym of' (for writers) and 'title of' (for political leaders, rulers, etc.), as well as a number of other self-explanatory introductions, are also used.

> Allen /'ælən/, Woody (born Allen Stewart Konigsberg) (b.1935), American film director, writer, and actor.

- Dates given for literary works are those of first publication. Dates for dramatic works, musical compositions, etc. are also of first publication, unless the date of first performance is more appropriate; where this is the case it is indicated in the text.
- The abbreviation fl. (= floruit, flourished) and imprecise periods such as '2nd century BC' are occasionally used in place of birth and death dates, where the latter are not known.

Nationality

- Where a person has changed his or her nationality both the original and later nationality are indicated.
- Nationalities relating to former names of countries are used where appropriate to the period in question, e.g. Ian Smith is described as 'Rhodesian', Mikhail Gorbachev as 'Soviet'.
- British (rather than English, Scottish, etc.) is used to describe politicians and other public officials of the UK and also to describe people whose nationality was not originally British but who took on British citizenship or for those born abroad to parents of British nationality. In most other cases, the appropriate nationality within the UK (English, Welsh, Scottish, or Northern Irish) is used.

Monarchs

Monarchs and other hereditary rulers of the same country with the same name are grouped together within the same main entry, having subentries of their own:

> Edmund /'edmənd/ the name of two kings of England:
>
> Edmund I (921–46), reigned 939–46. Soon after Edmund succeeded Athelstan, a Norse army took control of York and its dependent territories. From 941 Edmund set about recovering these northern territories, but after his death Northumbria fell again under Norse control.
>
> Edmund II (known as Edmund Ironside) (*c.*980–1016), son of Ethelred the Unready, reigned 1016. Edmund led the resistance to Canute's forces in 1015 and on his father's death was proclaimed king. After some initial success he was defeated at Ashingdon in Essex (1016) and was forced to divide the kingdom with Canute, retaining only Wessex. On Edmund's death Canute became king of all England.

Foreign titles of works

Titles of works in a foreign language are normally translated into English, and the original publication date is given. Exceptions to this rule include cases in which the title is better known or only known in the original language (such as À la recherche du temps perdu or Les Enfants du paradis).

3. PLACE-NAME ENTRIES

Place-names come before biographical names of the same spelling.

Statistics

- Population figures are given for all countries and US states, for towns and cities, and for some islands and other regions. The most recent census figures available are given; where no census figure is available, the most reliable up-to-date estimate is given.
- Other significant statistics, such as length of rivers, height of mountains, are also given.

Names

- For Chinese names the Pinyin transliteration is given as the main headword; if other transliterations or anglicized forms are well attested they are given as variant forms (e.g. the main headword is Beijing but the form Peking is also given).
- For other foreign names the form most familiar to speakers of English is given as the main headword, with variant and alternative names if necessary.
- Where a place-name has changed, the former name (or names) is given as appropriate.

Languages

In entries for countries all languages (i.e. not just official languages) spoken by a significant proportion (roughly 20 per cent) of people in that country are listed.

4. OTHER ENCYCLOPEDIC MATERIAL: GENERAL NOTES

This dictionary includes in-depth entries containing up-to-date information about a wide variety of topics, including politics, history, religion, medicine, technology, zoology, astronomy, archaeology, sport, the arts, philosophy, language, etc.

- Entries will often include references to people, places, etc. which have separate entries of their own. They will also include from time to time references to names which do not have their own separate entries (usually because they are not important enough in their own right); in these cases extra explanatory information will be given contextually, as, for example, a person's birth (and death) date, or a place's location.
- Where a normal word definition is followed by '(See note below.)', this means more is to be found on this particular topic in a separate paragraph following the end of the normal dictionary entry:

> fossil /'fos(ə)l/ n. & adj. ● n. 1 the remains or impression of a prehistoric animal or plant, usu. petrified while embedded in rock, amber, etc. (often attrib.: fossil bones; fossil shells). (See note below.) 2 colloq. an antiquated or unchanging person or thing. 3 a word that has become obsolete except in set phrases or forms, e.g. hue in hue and cry. ● adj. 1 of or like a fossil. 2 antiquated; out of date. □ fossil fuel a natural fuel such as coal or gas formed in the geological past from the remains of living organisms. fossil ivory see IVORY. □ fossilize v.tr. & intr. (also -ise). fossilization /ˌfosɪlaɪ'zeɪʃ(ə)n/ n. fossiliferous /ˌfosɪ'lɪfərəs/ adj. [F fossile f. L fossilis f. fodere foss- dig]
> ▪ Fossils are usually the hard parts of organisms, such as bones, teeth, shells, or wood, preserved in petrified form or as moulds or casts in rock. Trace fossils represent burrows, footprints, etc. Rarely, the fossils of such insubstantial organisms as jellyfish are preserved in fine-grained rocks such as shales, or the entire bodies of animals may be preserved frozen or in amber or tar. Fossils may be used to date accurately a particular rock stratum, and they have provided much of the information upon which the present subdivisions of the geological time-scale are based.

- Proper names which represent the capitalized form of a normal word (often with the, as the Fall, the Constitution) are often given their own separate entry, especially if the information given is more than just a short definition.

> Constitution, the (in full Constitution of the USA) the basic written set of principles and precedents of federal government in the US. The Constitution, consisting of seven main articles, was drawn up in 1787, largely based on the earlier Articles of Confederation (1781–7); after ratification by the states of the Union, it came into operation in 1789. Since 1789 twenty-six amendments have been added, including, in particular, the Bill of Rights (1791), which contains the first ten amendments. The underlying principle and aim of the Constitution is the preservation of individual citizens' and states' rights while ensuring an effective federal government; the division into legislative (Congress), judicial (Supreme Court), and executive (President) arms of government was designed to limit overall federal powers.

5. PRONUNCIATION

Guidance on the pronunciation of a headword will be found in most cases immediately after the headword, enclosed in oblique strokes / /, and is based on the standard pronunciation associated especially with southern England (sometimes referred to as 'received pronunciation').

- A pronunciation is not given for headwords consisting of more than one word where the separate words are listed elsewhere in the dictionary with their own pronunciation. For example, entries such as Second World War, Anglo-Irish Agreement, and Amnesty International are not given separate pronunciations.

- In some cases, more than one pronunciation is given: that given first is generally the preferred pronunciation; if the variant is preceded by the label disp. (= disputed), this indicates that some people disapprove of this variant or consider it incorrect.

- Pronunciations for variant forms are given at the main entry; those for alternative names are given at the alternative name (cross-reference) entry.

- Guidance on the pronunciation of words printed in bold type within an entry (for example, in the derivatives list) is limited to cases in which the pronunciation is substantially different from that of the headword. In derivative sections, the pronunciation for subsequent derivatives relates to the first preceding derivative having a pronunciation; if this is inappropriate, a separate pronunciation will be given.

Foreign pronunciations

In some entries, especially place-name entries, an alternative or variant, non-English, form of the headword is given; where this is the case, a foreign pronunciation is also given.

- In all other cases the first pronunciation given is always the standard pronunciation in English, even if the entry relates to a foreign name or place-name.

- A second pronunciation reflecting that used in the original language may be given where this is substantially different from the English pronunciation.

The International Phonetic Alphabet

Pronunciations are given using the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA). The symbols used, with their values, are as follows:

Consonants

b, d, f, h, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, t, v, w, and z have their usual English values. Other symbols are used as follows:

g	(get)	ŋ	(ring)	ʃ	(she)
tʃ	(chip)	θ	(thin)	ʒ	(decision)
dʒ	(jar)	ð	(this)	j	(yes)
x	(loch)

Vowels

short vowels		long vowels		diphthongs
æ	(cat)	oː	(arm)	eɪ	(day)
e	(bed)	iː	(see)	aɪ	(my)
ə	(ago)	ɔː	(saw)	ɔɪ	(boy)
ɪ	(sit)	ɜː	(her)	əʊ	(no)
ɒ	(hot)	uː	(too)	aʊ	(how) ʌ	(run)			ɪə	(near)
ʊ	(put)			eə	(hair)
				ʊə	(poor)
				aɪə	(fire)
				aʊə	(sour)

- (ə) signifies the indeterminate sound as in garden, carnal, and altruism.

- (r) at the end of a word indicates an r that is sounded when a word beginning with a vowel follows, as in clutter up and an acre of land.

The main or primary stress of a word is shown by ˈ preceding the relevant syllable; any secondary stress in words of three or more syllables is shown by ˌ preceding the relevant syllable.

- In addition the following IPA symbols are used in the representation of foreign pronunciations:

6. PART OF SPEECH

- A part of speech identifier, such as n. (= noun), v. (= verb), adj. (= adjective), is given for all main headwords except place-name entries, biographical entries, and other proper-name entries except for languages and peoples (as Boer War, Rosetta Stone, World Health Organization, Constitution, the).

- Part-of-speech identification is not intended to be exhaustive. It is part of normal usage, for example, for some adjectives to be used as nouns and vice versa, even where entries do not explicitly mention this.

- All derivatives are given a part of speech identifier. Compounds and phrases listed under a main headword are given a part of speech when necessary to aid clarity.

- When a headword has more than one part of speech, a list is given at the beginning of the entry, and the treatment of successive parts of speech (in the same order as the list) is introduced by a bullet marker in each case:

> lack /læk/ n. & v. ● n. (usu. foll. by of) an absence, want, or deficiency (a lack of talent; felt the lack of warmth). ● v.tr. be without or deficient in (lacks courage). □ for lack of owing to the absence of (went hungry for lack of money). lack for lack. [ME lac, lacen, corresp. to MDu., MLG lak deficiency, MDu. laken to lack]

- The following standard parts of speech are used (the abbreviation used is given in brackets):

adjective (adj.)
adverb (adv.)
conjunction (conj.)
interjection (int.)
noun or noun phrase (n.)
preposition (prep.)
pronoun (pron.)
verb (v.)

- The following standard identifiers are used in place of a part of speech:

abbreviation (abbr.)
combining form (comb.form) contraction (contr.)
prefix
suffix
symbol (symb.)

The following additional explanations should also be noted (see also section 10 below):

- attrib. (= attributive) is used to describe an adjective placed in front of the word it modifies; attrib.adj. is used as a part of speech identifier for adjectives which can normally only be used attributively, as breakneck in breakneck speed or consulting in consulting physician.

- attrib. is also used to describe a noun which is placed before and used to modify another noun but where its function is not fully adjectival (e.g. model in a model student; the student is very model is not acceptable usage).

- predic. (= predicative) is used to describe an adjective placed in the predicate of a sentence (usually after a verb); predic.adj. is used as a part of speech identifier for adjectives which can normally only be used predicatively, as aware in she's not aware of it, or asleep in he's asleep.

- absol. (= absolute) is used to refer to uses of transitive verbs where an object is implied but not stated, as in smoking kills and let me explain.

- 'in comb.' (= in combination) refers to uses of words (especially adjectives) as an element joined by a hyphen with another word, as crested, in red-crested, great-crested, and so on.

7. INFLECTION

Inflection of words (i.e. plurals, past tenses, etc.) is given after the part of speech concerned:

> safari /sə'fɑːrɪ/ n. (pl. safaris) 1 a hunting or scientific expedition, esp. in East Africa (go on safari). 2 a sightseeing trip to see African animals in their natural habitat.
> sag /sæg/ v. & n. ● v.intr. (sagged, sagging) 1 sink or subside under weight or pressure, esp. unevenly. 2 have a downward bulge or curve in the middle.

- The forms given are normally those in use in British English. Variant American forms are identified by the label US.

- Pronunciation of inflected forms is given when this differs significantly from the pronunciation of the headword. The designation 'pronunc. same' denotes that the pronunciation, despite a change of form, is the same as that of the headword.

- The inflection of nouns, verbs, adjectives, and adverbs is given when it is irregular (as described below) or when, though regular, it causes difficulty (as with forms such as budgeted, coos, and taxis).

Plurals of nouns

Nouns that form their plural regularly by adding -s (or -es when they end in -s, -x, -z, -sh, or soft -ch) receive no comment. Other plural forms are given, notably:

- nouns ending in -i or -o.
- nouns ending in -y.
- nouns ending in Latinate forms such as -a and -um.
- nouns with more than one plural form, e.g. fish and aquarium.
- nouns with plurals involving a change in the stem, e.g. foot, feet.
- nouns with a plural form identical to the singular form, e.g. sheep.
- nouns ending in -ful, e.g. handful.

Forms of verbs

The following forms are regarded as regular:

- third person singular present forms adding -s to the stem (or -es to stems ending in -s, -x, -z, -sh, or soft -ch).
- past tenses and past participles adding -ed to the stem, dropping a final silent e (e.g. changed, danced).
- present participles adding -ing to the stem, dropping a final silent e (e.g. changing, dancing).

Other forms are given, notably:

- doubling of a final consonant, e.g. bat, batted, batting.
- strong and irregular forms involving a change in the stem, e.g. come, came, come, and go, went, gone.

Comparative and superlative of adjectives and adverbs

- Words of one syllable adding -er or -est, those ending in silent e dropping the e (e.g. braver, bravest), are regarded as regular. Most one-syllable words have these forms, but participial adjectives (e.g. pleased) do not.

- Those that double a final consonant (e.g. hot, hotter, hottest) are given, as are two-syllable words that have comparative and superlative forms in -er and -est (of which very many are forms ending in -y, e.g. happy, happier, happiest), and their negative forms (e.g. unhappier, unhappiest).
- It should be noted that specification of these forms indicates only that they are used; it is usually also possible to form comparatives with more and superlatives with most (as in more happy, most unhappy), which is the standard way of proceeding with adjectives and adverbs that cannot be inflected.

Adjectives in -able formed from transitive verbs

These are given as derivatives when there is sufficient evidence of their currency; in general they are formed as follows:

- Verbs drop silent final -e except after c and g (e.g. achievable but exchangeable).
- Verbs of more than one syllable ending in -y (preceded by a consonant or qu) change y to i (e.g. enviable, fanciable).
- A final consonant is often doubled as in normal inflection (e.g. conferrable, regrettable).

8. DEFINITION

Definitions are listed in a numbered sequence in order of comparative familiarity and importance, with the most current and important senses first. They are subdivided into lettered senses (a, b, etc.) when these are closely related or call for collective treatment.

> pan^{1} /pæn/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a a vessel of metal, earthenware, or plastic, usu. broad and shallow, used for cooking and other domestic purposes. b the contents of this. 2 a panlike vessel in which substances are heated etc. 3 any similar shallow container such as the bowl of a pair of scales or that used for washing gravel etc. to separate gold. 4 Brit. the bowl of a lavatory. 5 part of the lock that held the priming in old guns. 6 a hollow in the ground (salt-pan). 7 a hard substratum of soil (hardpan). 8 US sl. the face. 9 a a metal drum in a steel band. b steel-band music and the associated culture.

9. ILLUSTRATIVE EXAMPLES

Many examples of words in use are given to support, and in some cases supplement, the definitions. These appear in italics in brackets. They are meant to amplify meaning and (especially when following a grammatical point) illustrate how the word is used in context, as in the following sense of alert:

> alert /əˈlɜːt/ .... ● v.tr. (often foll. by to) make alert; warn (were alerted to the danger).

10. GRAMMATICAL INFORMATION

Definitions are often accompanied by explanations in brackets of how the word or phrase in question is used in context. Often, the comment refers to words that usually follow (foll. by) or precede (prec. by) the word being explained. For example, at sack^{1}:

> sack^{1} /sæk/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a a large strong bag, usu. made of hessian, paper, or plastic, for storing or conveying goods. b (usu. foll. by of) this with its contents (a sack of potatoes). c a quantity contained in a sack. 2 (prec. by the) colloq. dismissal from employment. 3 (prec. by the) N. Amer. sl. bed. 4 a a woman's short loose dress with a sacklike appearance. b archaic or hist. a woman's loose gown, or a silk train attached to the shoulders of this. 5 a man's or woman's loose-hanging coat not shaped to the back.

sense 1b usually appears as a sack of (something), as the example further shows; and senses 2 and 3 always appear as the sack.

- With verbs, the fact that a sense is transitive or intransitive can affect the construction. In the examples given below, prevail is intransitive (and the construction is prevail on a person) and urge is transitive (and the construction is urge a person on).

> prevail /prɪˈveɪl/ v.intr. 1 (often foll. by against, over) be victorious or gain mastery. 2 be the more usual or predominant. 3 exist or occur in general use or experience; be current. 4 (foll. by on, upon) persuade.
> urge /ɜːdʒ/ v. & n. ● v.tr. 1 (often foll. by on) drive forcibly; impel; hasten (urged them on; urged the horses forward). 2 (often foll. by to + infin. or that + clause) encourage or entreat earnestly or persistently (urged them to go; urged them to action; urged that they should go).

- The formula (foll. by to + infin.) means that the word is followed by a normal infinitive with to, as in want to leave and eager to learn.
- The formula (foll. by that + clause) indicates the routine addition of a clause with that, as in said that it was late. (For the omission of that, as in said it was late, see the usage note in the entry for that.)
- 'pres. part.' and 'verbal noun' denote verbal forms in -ing that function as adjectives and nouns respectively, as in set him laughing and tired of asking.

11. USAGE

If the use of a word is restricted in any way, this is indicated by any of various labels printed in italics, as follows:

Geographical labels

- Brit. indicates that the use is found chiefly in British English (and often also in Australian and New Zealand English and in other parts of the Commonwealth) but not in American English.
- US indicates that the use is found chiefly in American English (and also in Australian and New Zealand English) but not in British English except as a conscious Americanism.
- N. Amer. indicates that the use is found chiefly in the US and Canada (and also in Australian and New Zealand English) but not in British English.
- Ind. indicates that the use is found in the subcontinent comprising India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh.
- Other geographical designations (e.g. Austral., NZ, Sc., S.Afr.) restrict uses to the areas named.
- These usage labels should be distinguished from comments of the type '(in the UK)' or '(in the US)' preceding definitions, which denote that the thing defined is associated with the country named.

Register labels

Levels of usage, or registers, are indicated as follows:

- formal indicates uses that are normally restricted to formal (esp. written) English, e.g. commence.
- colloq. (= colloquial) indicates a use that is normally restricted to informal (esp. spoken) English.
- sl. (= slang) indicates a use of the most informal kind, unsuited to written English and often restricted to a particular social group.

- coarse sl. indicates a slang use which is normally taboo.
- dial. (= dialect) indicates a word that is restricted to non-standard or dialect use.
- archaic indicates a word that is generally considered old-fashioned and is often restricted to special contexts such as legal or religious use, or is used for special effect.
- literary indicates a word or use that is found chiefly in literature.
- poet. (= poetic) indicates uses confined to poetry or other contexts with similar connotations.
- joc. (= jocular) indicates uses that are intended to be humorous or playful.
- derog. (= derogatory) denotes uses that are intentionally disparaging.
- offens. (= offensive) denotes uses that cause offence, whether intentionally or not.
- disp. (= disputed) indicates a use that is disputed (and often regarded as erroneous or controversial). Often this is enough to alert the user to a danger or difficulty; when further explanation is needed a usage note (see note below) is used as well or instead.
- hist. (= historical) denotes a word or use that is confined to historical reference, normally because the thing referred to no longer exists.
- propr. (= proprietary) denotes a term that has the status of a trade mark (see Note on proprietary status, p. xx).

Subject labels

The many subject labels, e.g. Law, Med., Math., Naut., show that a word or sense is current only in a particular field of activity.

Usage notes

These are added to give extra information not central to the definition, and to explain points of grammar and usage. They are introduced by the symbol ¶. The purpose of these notes is not to prescribe usage but to alert the user to a difficulty or controversy attached to a particular use.

12. PHRASES AND IDIOMS

These are listed (together with compounds) in alphabetical order after the treatment of the main senses, introduced by the symbol □. The words a, the, one, and person do not count for purposes of alphabetical order:

> □ on the safe side with a margin of security against risks. safe bet a bet that is certain to succeed. safe-breaker (or -blower or -cracker) a person who breaks open and robs safes. safe conduct 1 a privilege of immunity from arrest or harm, esp. on a particular occasion. 2 a document securing this. safe deposit a building containing strongrooms and safes let separately. safe haven 1 a place of refuge or security. 2 a protected zone in a country designated for members of a religious or ethnic minority. safe house a place of refuge or rendezvous for spies, criminals, etc. safe keeping preservation in a safe place. safe light Photog. a filtered light for use in a darkroom. safe period the time during and near the menstrual period when conception is least likely. safe seat a seat in Parliament etc. that is usually won with a large margin by a particular party. safe sex sexual activity in which precautions are taken to reduce the risk of spreading sexually transmitted diseases, esp. Aids.

They are normally defined under the first important word in the phrase, except when a later word is more clearly the key word or is the common word in a phrase with variants (in which case a cross-reference often appears at the entry for the first word):

> make do 1 manage with the limited or inadequate means available. 2 (foll. by with) manage with (something) as an inferior substitute. make an example of punish as a warning to others. make a fool of see FOOL^{1}. make for 1 tend to result in (happiness etc.). 2 proceed towards (a place). 3 assault; attack. 4 confirm (an opinion). make friends (often foll. by with) become friendly. make fun of see FUN.

13. COMPOUNDS

Compound terms forming one word (such as bathroom, newspaper) are listed as main entries.

Compound terms consisting of two or more separate words or two or more words joined by a hyphen are generally given under the headword of the first word. Exceptions to this, in which compounds are given as main entries, include:

- where the compound is a proper name (and is therefore capitalized), e.g. East River, Baltic Exchange, Lord Privy Seal, Armistice Day.
- where the first element of the compound is a place-name or person's name (e.g. Faraday's constant, Adonis blue, London pride).
- where additional encyclopedic or etymological information is introduced (e.g. air raid, general strike, burning bush).
- where the compound has multiple senses and parts of speech.

14. DERIVATIVES

Words formed by adding a suffix to another word are in many cases listed at the end of the entry for the main word, introduced in a separate section by the symbol □. In this position they are not given a definition since they can be understood from the sense of the main word and that given at the suffix concerned, as in the entry for citizen.

When further definition is called for they are given main entries in their own right (e.g. changeable).

15. ETYMOLOGY

A brief account of the etymology, or origin, of words is given in square brackets at the end of entries. (If there is a separate paragraph of information, the etymology comes before this, as, for example, at the entry for fossil.) Etymologies are not given for compound words of obvious formation (such as bathroom and jellyfish), for routinely formed derivatives (such as changeable, muddy, and seller), or for words consisting of clearly identified elements already explained (such as Anglo-Irish, overrun, and many words in in-, re-, un-, etc.). Etymologies are also not always given for every word of a set sharing the same basic origin (proprietary and proprietor, for example). Noteworthy features, such as an origin in Old English, are however always given.

Etymologies are not regularly given for proper names such as place-names or personal names, though they are given for names of languages and peoples. A place-name, biographical entry, or other proper-name entry will occasionally include etymological information where this is thought to be particularly relevant or interesting, though in this case the information is often presented contextually rather than in square brackets (see, for example, America, Threadneedle Street, Methodist, Heliopolis).

The following notes act as a guide to the etymological information in this dictionary. More detailed information about word origins can be found in the New Oxford Dictionary of English and the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary.

- The immediate source language is given first. Forms in other languages are not given if they are exactly or nearly the same as the English form given in the headword.
- Words of Germanic origin are described as 'f. Gmc' or 'f. WG' (West Germanic) as appropriate; unrecorded or postulated forms are not normally given.
- OE (Old English) is used for words that are known to have been used before AD 1150, and ME (Middle English) for words traceable to the period 1150–1500 (no distinction being made between early and late Middle English).
- Words of Romance origin are referred to their immediate source, usually F (French) or OF (Old French before 1400), and then to earlier sources when known.
- AF (Anglo-French) denotes the variety of French current in England in the Middle Ages after the Norman Conquest.
- Rmc (Romanic) denotes the vernacular descendants of Latin that are the source of French, Spanish, Italian, etc. Romanic forms are almost always of the 'unrecorded' or 'postulated' kind, and are not specified except to clarify a significant change of form. Often the formula 'ult. f. L' etc. (ultimately from Latin etc.) is used to indicate that the route from Latin is via Romanic forms.
- L (Latin) denotes classical Latin up to about AD 200; OL (Old Latin) Latin before about 75 BC; LL (Late Latin) Latin of about 200–600; med.L (medieval Latin) Latin of about 600–1500; mod.L (modern Latin) Latin in use (mainly for technical and scientific purposes) since about 1500.
- Similar divisions for 'late', 'medieval', and 'modern' are made for Greek.
- Many English words have corresponding forms in both French and Latin, and it cannot always be established which was the immediate source. In such cases the formula 'F or L' is used (e.g. at section: 'F section or L sectio'); in these cases the Latin form is the source of the French word and (either directly or indirectly) of the English word.
- When the origin of a word cannot be reliably established, the forms 'orig. unkn.' (= origin unknown) and 'orig. uncert.' (= origin uncertain) are used. In these cases the century of the first recorded occurrence of the word in English is given.
- An equals sign (=) precedes words in other languages that are parallel formations from a common source (cognates) rather than sources of the English word.

16. PREFIXES, SUFFIXES, AND COMBINING FORMS

A large selection of these is given in the main body of the text; prefixes are given in the form ex-, re-, etc., and suffixes in the form -ion, -ness, etc. These entries should be consulted to explain the many routinely formed derivatives given at the end of entries (see above, section 14).

- Combining forms (e.g. bio-, -graphy) are semantically significant elements that can be attached to words or elements as explained in the usage note at the entry for combine.
- The pronunciation given for a prefix, suffix, or combining form is an approximate one for purposes of articulating and (in some cases) identifying the headword; pronunciation and stress may change considerably when they form part of a word.

17. CROSS-REFERENCES

These are introduced by any of a number of reference types, as follows:

- '=' denotes that the meaning of the item at which the cross-reference occurs is the same as that of the item referred to.
- 'see' indicates that information will be found at the point referred to, and is widely used for encyclopedic matter and in the idiom sections of entries to deal with items that can be located at any of a number of words included in the idiom (see also above, section 12).
- 'see also' indicates that further information can be found at the point referred to.
- 'cf.' denotes an item related or relevant to the one being consulted, and the reference often completes or clarifies the exact meaning of the item being treated.
- 'opp.' refers to a word or sense that is opposite to the one being treated, and again often completes or clarifies the sense.
- References of the kind 'pl. of' (= plural of), 'past of' (= past tense of), etc., are given at entries for inflections and other related forms.
- 'var. of' (= variant of) refers to a word that is the main headword form of one or more variant forms.

Cross-references preceded by any of these reference types appear in small capitals if the reference is to a main headword, and in italics if the reference is to a compound or phrase within an entry.

- References in italics to compounds and defined phrases are to the entry for the first word unless another is specified.

List of Abbreviations and Symbols

Note on proprietary status

This dictionary includes some words which have or are asserted to have proprietary status as trademarks or otherwise. Their inclusion does not imply that they have acquired for legal purposes a non-proprietary or general significance nor any other judgement concerning their legal status. In cases where the editorial staff have some evidence that a word has proprietary status this is indicated in the entry for that word but no judgement concerning the legal status of such words is made or implied thereby.

Abelard /ˈæbɪˌlɑːd/, Peter (1079–1142), French scholar, theologian, and philosopher. His independence of mind, particularly his application of philosophical principles to theological questions, impressed his contemporaries but brought him into frequent conflict with the authorities and led to his being twice condemned for heresy. He lectured in Paris until his academic career was cut short in 1118 by his tragic love affair with his pupil Héloïse, niece of Fulbert, a canon of Notre-Dame. Abelard was castrated at Fulbert's instigation; he entered a monastery, and made Héloïse become a nun. Abelard continued his controversial teaching, applying reason to questions of faith, notably to the doctrine of the Trinity. In the early 1130s he and Héloïse put together a collection of their love letters and other correspondence, which was published in 1616. Abelard and Héloïse are buried together in Paris.

(See note below.) ¶ With reference to indigenous Australians, some people prefer Aborigine and others Aboriginal as the noun. The adjective in this sense is always Aboriginal. 3 (Aboriginal) any of the Australian Aboriginal languages. □ Aboriginality /,æbə,rɪdʒɪ'nælɪtɪ/ n. [as ABORIGINE + -AL^1]

- The Australian Aboriginals arrived in Australia between 25,000 and 40,000 years ago. Before the arrival of Europeans in the 18th century, they were scattered over the whole continent, including Tasmania, and lived as hunter-gatherers; their numbers fell dramatically following European occupation, especially as a result of European diseases such as smallpox. After the 1930s, numbers began to rise, and in 1991 their population was roughly 265,000. Their languages, estimated at several hundred in number and now mostly extinct, are related to each other but not, apparently, to any other language family. Throughout the 19th and early 20th centuries, Aboriginals were regarded as inferior and were persecuted; in more recent years, they have become politically more active and their situation with regard to ownership of land and legal representation has improved.

aborigine /,æbə'rɪdʒɪnɪ/ n. (usu. in pl.) 1 an aboriginal inhabitant. 2 (usu. Aborigine) = ABORIGINAL 2. ¶ In the plural, Aboriginals is preferred to Aborigines. 3 an aboriginal plant or animal. (See note below.) 2 a stunted or deformed creature or thing. 3 the failure of a project or an action. 4 Biol. the arrest of the development of an organ. [L abortio (as ABORT)]

- The practice of inducing abortion to end unwanted pregnancy was widespread from ancient times, and in general was not criminalized until the 19th century. Abortion began to be legalized again in many countries in the 1950s and 1960s (in the Soviet Union from 1920), but with strict controls; in the UK it is governed by the 1967 Abortion Act and permitted under certain circumstances up to the twenty-fourth week of pregnancy, although some foetuses delivered at an earlier stage may be enabled to survive. In some parts of the world, for example the Republic of Ireland, it remains illegal. Abortion is an issue which arouses great controversy between defenders of the mother's right of choice and those (particularly Roman Catholics and Christian fundamentalists) holding that human life is sacred and begins at the moment of conception.

abstract art n. in its broadest sense, any art that does not attempt to represent external, recognizable reality, and which thereby tends to concentrate on shape, colour, and form. Specifically, the term relates to a modern phenomenon (the first abstract works of art are generally considered to date from *c.*1910–14), in which the traditional Western view of art imitating nature was abandoned, and which is manifested in a great variety of movements and styles. From these, two general types can be distinguished: hard-edged and geometric (akin to the linear and classical) and flowing and organic (akin to the painterly and romantic).

Achaean /ə'ki:ən/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 of or relating to Achaea. 2 literary (esp. in Homeric contexts) Greek. ● n. 1 an inhabitant of Achaea. (See note below.) 2 (usu. in pl.) literary a Greek. [L Achaeus f. Gk Akhaios]

▪ The Achaeans were among the earliest Greek-speaking inhabitants of Greece, being established there well before the 12th century BC. Some scholars identify them with the Mycenaeans of the 14th–13th centuries BC, who were the Greek protagonists in the Trojan War. The Greeks in the Iliad are regularly referred to as Achaeans, but it may be that only the military leaders were Achaeans. In the Peloponnese and elsewhere, the Achaeans are thought to have supplanted in the 11th or 12th century BC by the Dorians.

Achilles /əˈkɪliːz/ Gk Mythol. a hero of the Trojan War, son of Peleus and Thetis. During his infancy his mother plunged him in the Styx, thus making his body invulnerable except for the heel by which she held him. The account of the Iliad tells how Achilles withdrew from fighting in the Trojan War after a bitter quarrel with Agamemnon. He later re-entered the battle after his friend Patroclus, clad in Achilles' armour, was killed by Hector. In revenge, Achilles killed Hector and dragged his body behind the wheels of his chariot round the walls of Troy. He was wounded in the heel during the Trojan War by an arrow shot by Paris and died of this wound. □ Achilles' heel a weak or vulnerable point. Achilles' tendon a tendon attaching the calf muscles to the heel.

(See note below.) 2 (in general use) any sour substance. 3 sl. the drug LSD. ● adj. 1 sharp-tasting, sour. 2 biting, sharp (an acid wit). 3 Chem. having the essential properties of an acid. 4 Geol. (of rocks) containing much silica. 5 (of a colour) intense, bright. □ acid drop Brit. a kind of sweet with a sharp taste. acid-head sl. a habitual user of the drug LSD. acid house a style of house music featuring a mesmeric synthesized sound and distinctive gurgling bass. acid radical Chem. an organic radical formed by the removal of hydroxyl from an acid. acid test 1 a severe or conclusive test. 2 a test in which acid is used to test for gold etc. put the acid on Austral. sl. seek to extract a loan or favour etc. from. □ acidly adv. acidness n. acidic /əˈsɪdɪk/ adj. acidimetry /ˌæsɪˈdɪmɪtrɪ/ n. [F acide or L acidus f. acere be sour]

▪ The term acid has been defined in various ways. It was originally applied to sour, corrosive substances like sulphuric acid, whose properties were attributed in the 17th century to their consisting of sharp particles. The commonest modern definition of an acid is (as given above) a substance which releases hydrogen ions when dissolved in water (to form the ion H_3O^+) and is neutralized by bases to form salts. In chemistry acids are sometimes more widely defined as compounds which are donors of hydrogen ions or protons, or acceptors of electron pairs. Most organic acids contain the carboxyl group –COOH. Some of the most important industrial compounds are acids, such as sulphuric and nitric acids.

acidify /əˈsɪdɪˌfaɪ/ v.tr. & intr. (-ies, -ied) make or become acid. □ acidification /əˌsɪdɪfɪˈkeɪʃ(ə)n/ n.

acidophil /ˈæsɪdəʊˌfɪl, əˈsɪdəfɪl/ n. (also acidophile /-ˌfaɪl/) Physiol. a white blood cell that is acidophilic.

acidophilic /ˌæsɪdəʊˈfɪlɪk, əˌsɪdəfɪl-/ adj. 1 Biol. (of a cell or its contents) readily stained with acid dyes. 2 esp. Bot. growing best in acid conditions.

acidosis /ˌæsɪˈdəʊsɪs/ n. an over-acid condition of the body fluids or tissues. □ acidotic /-ˈdɒtɪk/ adj.

acid rain n. rainfall made acidic by atmospheric pollution. The phenomenon first came to prominence in the 1970s with reports of widespread deaths of trees and freshwater life in northern forests and lakes. The chief cause is the industrial burning of fossil fuels, especially coal burned in power stations. The waste gases contain sulphur and nitrogen oxides which combine with atmospheric water to form acids. The contaminants are often carried long distances and over national boundaries before causing environmental damage at ground level. International action to reduce the problem has taken the form of agreements to limit oxide emissions; practical action has focused on removing potentially harmful elements from fuel before burning and on removing the oxides by scrubbing the exhaust gases.

acidulate /əˈsɪdjʊˌleɪt/ v.tr. make somewhat acid. □ acidulation /əˌsɪdjʊˈleɪʃ(ə)n/ n. [L acidulus dimin. of acidus sour]

[Heb. 'ādām man]

- In the Bible, the Book of Genesis describes how Adam was formed from the dust of the ground and God's breath; Eve, the first woman, was created from one of Adam's ribs as his companion. They lived together in the Garden of Eden until the serpent tempted Eve to eat an apple from the forbidden tree; she persuaded Adam to do the same. As a result of this original sin of disobedience, they were both expelled from the garden.

Adam^2 /'ædəm/, Robert (1728–92), Scottish architect. He undertook a grand tour of Europe, starting in 1754, mainly in France and Italy, which gave him knowledge of ancient buildings and modern neoclassical theory. Robert and his brother James (1730–94) set up in business in London in 1758 and in the course of the next forty years initiated the 'Adam Revolution', introducing a lighter, more decorative style than the Palladianism favoured by the British architecture of the previous half-century. Typical examples of their work include Home House in Portland Square, London, and Register House in Edinburgh.

Adler /'ædlə(r)/, Alfred (1870–1937), Austrian psychologist and psychiatrist. At first a disciple of Sigmund Freud, he came to disagree with Freud's idea that mental illness was caused by sexual conflicts in infancy, arguing that society and culture were equally, if not more, significant factors. In 1907 he introduced the concept of the inferiority complex, asserting that the key to understanding both personal and mass problems was the sense of inferiority and the individual's striving to compensate for this. In 1911 he and his followers formed their own school to develop the ideas of individual psychology, and in 1921 he founded the first child guidance clinic, in Vienna. □ Adlerian /æd'lɪərɪən/ adj.

F avertissement (as ADVERTISE)]

advertising /'ædvəˌtaɪzɪŋ/ n. the practice of influencing people through public media in order to promote sales of products and services or promote political or other messages. By the mid-17th century weekly news-sheets in London carried announcements and advertisements, but advertising did not become an established industry until the 19th century, when the growth of popular newspapers (especially in the US) enabled advertisements to reach a wider audience, and led to the setting up of advertising agencies. Advertising has grown enormously in variety and sophistication in recent years, largely as a result of the growth in the media in general; television and radio commercials, posters and billboards, and direct mail are some of its different forms. It is being used increasingly by non-commercial organizations such as governments, trade unions, and charities.

aeroplane /ˈeərəˌpleɪn/ n. esp. Brit. a powered heavier-than-air flying vehicle with fixed wings. The first true aeroplane to achieve controlled sustained flight was that designed, built, and flown by the Wright brothers in 1903. Aeroplanes were used in the First World War, and since then development has been stimulated largely by military requirements. Early aeroplanes were largely piston-engined externally braced biplanes, which began to be superseded in the 1920s and 1930s by internally braced monoplanes of increasing speed and strength. The first jet fighters were operational before the end of the Second World War. In the postwar period civil aviation expanded massively with the introduction of large long-range airliners powered by propellers or, increasingly, jets. Supersonic flight, first achieved in the US in 1947, is confined to military aviation with the exception of the Anglo-French Concorde airliner. [F aéroplane (as AERO-, PLANE¹)]

aerosol /ˈeərəˌsɒl/ n. 1 a a substance packed under pressure, usually with a propellant gas, and able to be released as a fine spray. (See note below.) b a container holding such a substance. 2 a system of colloidal particles dispersed in a gas (e.g. fog or smoke). [AERO- + SOL¹, orig. in sense 2]

▪ Aerosols as a means of applying paints, insecticides, polishes, cosmetics, etc. were first developed commercially in the US in the early 1940s. The propellant gas should ideally be inert, non-toxic, and non-flammable; for this reason chlorofluorocarbons were often used, but they have been banned in many countries after having been shown to damage the earth's ozone layer. Hydrocarbon gases have also been used as propellants; some newer aerosols use carbon dioxide generated in the canister.

aerospace /ˈeərəʊˌspeɪs/ n. 1 the earth's atmosphere and outer space. 2 the technology of aviation in this region.

aerotrain /ˈeərəʊˌtreɪn/ n. a train that is supported on an air-cushion and guided by a track. [F aérotrain (as AERO-, TRAIN)]

Aeschines /ˈiːskɪˌniːz/ (*c.*390–*c.*314 BC), Athenian orator and statesman. He opposed Demosthenes' efforts to unite the Greek city-states against Macedon, with which he attempted to make peace. Aeschines was tried for treason in 343 but acquitted, and left Athens for Rhodes in 330 after failing to defeat Demosthenes.

Aeschylus /ˈiːskɪləs/ (*c.*525–*c.*456 BC), Greek dramatist. The earliest writer of Greek tragic drama whose works survive, he is best known for his trilogy the Oresteia (458 BC), consisting of Agamemnon, Choephoroe, and Eumenides. These tell the story of Agamemnon's murder at the hands of his wife Clytemnestra and the vengeance of their son Orestes. Aeschylus is distinguished by the scale and grandeur of his conceptions. He departed from tradition by giving more weight to dialogue than to choral song and in adding a second actor to the existing one plus chorus.

Aesthetic Movement n. a literary and artistic movement which flourished in England in the 1880s, devoted to 'art for art's sake', and rejecting the notion that art should have a social or moral purpose. Its chief exponents included Wilde, Beerbohm, and Beardsley, and others associated with the journal the Yellow Book. They were heavily influenced by the Pre-Raphaelites and Walter Pater. They were notorious for their dedication to the ideal of beauty, which was often carried to extravagant lengths. Although ridiculed for their affectation of speech and manner and eccentricity of dress, they nevertheless helped to focus on important formal concerns in art.

Afghanistan /æf'gænɪˌstæn/ a mountainous landlocked republic in central Asia; pop. (est. 1991) 16,600,000; official languages, Pashto and Dari (the local form of Persian); capital, Kabul. Part of the Indian Mogul empire, Afghanistan became independent in the mid-18th century, and in the 19th and early 20th centuries was a focal point for conflicting Russian and British interests on the North-West Frontier, the British fighting three wars against the Afghans between 1839 and 1919. A constitutional monarchy since 1930, Afghanistan became politically unstable in the 1970s and was invaded by the Soviet Union in Dec. 1979. Soviet forces withdrew in 1988–9; the regime they had set up collapsed in 1992. In 1996 the fundamentalist Taliban movement gained control of Kabul and set up an Islamic state: this was overthrown in 2001 by US-led forces in conjunction with Afghan groups following the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon by Islamic terrorists.

Africa /'æfrɪkə/ the second largest continent, a southward projection of the Old World land mass, divided roughly in two by the equator and surrounded by sea except where the Isthmus of Suez joins it to Asia. The human race may well have originated in Africa; fossil hominid remains dating from about 14,000,000 years BP have been found in East Africa. Egypt in the north-east was one of the world's earliest centres of civilization, and the Mediterranean coast has been subject to European influence since classical times, but much of the continent remained unknown to the outside world until voyages of discovery between the 15th and 17th centuries. The interior was explored and partitioned by European nations in the second half of the 19th century. In the three decades following the Second World War, almost all the former colonies became established as independent states.

African National Congress (abbr. ANC) a South African political party and black nationalist organization, founded in 1912 with the aim of securing racial equality and black representation in Parliament. After the ANC was banned by the South African government in 1960, its members turned to sabotage and guerrilla warfare, operating both in and outside South Africa, with the headquarters in Zambia. In 1990 the ban on the ANC was lifted, and Nelson Mandela, the ANC's most prominent leader, was released from prison. During 1991–3 progress towards reform was hampered by fighting between factions of the ANC's mainly Xhosa supporters and the rival (largely Zulu) Inkatha organization and by serious clashes with the security forces. Following the country's first democratic elections in April 1994 the ANC gained 62.6 per cent of the vote (252 seats in the National Assembly) and Mandela became the new President of South Africa.

(See note below.) □ agricultural /ˌægrɪ'kʌltʃərəl/ adj. agriculturalist n. agriculturally adv. agriculturist n. [F agriculture or L agricultura f. ager agri field + cultura CULTURE]

▪ The beginnings of agriculture date from the neolithic period, approximately 9,000 years ago, and are associated with the establishment of settled communities, as in the Tigris–Euphrates valley and beside the Nile. The type and development of farming have varied in different parts of the world and methods used in one place have been (and still are) sometimes centuries ahead of those of another. In Britain, strip farming associated with the feudal system was replaced in the 18th century by enclosed fields (see AGRARIAN REVOLUTION); labour-saving machinery and improved methods of transport made increased production possible. In developed countries, modern-day intensive farming (increased mechanization, the use of pesticides and fertilizers, as well as scientific developments in animal breeding and rearing), though helping to increase production and efficiency, has not proved entirely beneficial; recent government legislation and other interventionist strategies in Europe and elsewhere reflect environmental concern with problems such as soil erosion, disruption of natural habitat, and pollution, along with an awareness of ethical issues related to practices such as factory farming.

Aids /eɪdz/ n. (also AIDS) acquired immune deficiency syndrome, a disease in which there is severe loss of cellular immunity leaving the sufferer susceptible to certain opportunistic infections and malignancies. The cause is a virus (called the human immunodeficiency virus or HIV) transmitted in blood and in sexual fluids, and though the incubation period may be long the fully developed disease is invariably fatal. Aids was first identified in the early 1980s but certainly existed somewhat earlier; it now affects millions of people. In the developed world the disease first spread among homosexuals, intravenous drug users, and recipients of infected blood transfusions, before reaching the wider population. This has tended to overshadow a greater epidemic in parts of Africa, where transmission is mainly through heterosexual contact. □ Aids-related complex a set of symptoms including diseased lymph nodes, fever, weight loss, and malaise that seems to precede the full development of Aids. It is no longer used on an everyday basis. ● adj. of or relating to the Ainu or their language. [Ainu, = man]

▪ The Ainu are physically distinct (with light skin colour and round eyes) from the majority population of Japan. Archaeological evidence suggests that the Ainu were resident in the area as early as 5000 BC, thereby predating the great Mongoloid expansion. During the 19th century the Ainu were largely displaced from their traditional lands in the north of Hokkaido island, and in the 20th century intermarriage and cultural assimilation with the Japanese resulted in a decline in numbers to about 50,000 and a shift from their traditional lifestyle as hunter-gatherers.

airscrew /'eəskru:/ n. Brit. an aircraft propeller.

airship /'eəʃɪp/ n. a power-driven steerable aircraft that uses gases which are lighter than air to keep it buoyant. There are three main types of airship: rigid, having a rigid framework for maintaining the shape of its hull; non-rigid (also called a blimp), in which internal pressure maintains the shape; and semi-rigid, with a rigid keel running the length of the ship. The first successful airship was made in France in 1884; by the turn of the century Germany had taken the lead with the designs of Count von Zeppelin, whose machines were used in the First World War for bombing raids on England, as well as for passenger services, including transatlantic flights. A series of disasters with hydrogen-filled airships in the 1930s, including the British R101 at Beauvais, France (1930), and the German Hindenburg at Lakehurst, New Jersey (1937), led to a decline in their use; in recent years airships have been made with the less dangerous non-flammable helium.

When soldiers searched his house, he put on the priest's cloak and was arrested and condemned to death. Feast day, 22 June.

Albania /æl'beɪnɪə/ a republic in SE Europe, bordering on the Adriatic Sea; pop. (est. 1991) 3,300,000; official language, Albanian; capital, Tirana. Much of the land is mountainous and forested. Although Albania was nominally part of the Byzantine and later the Ottoman Empire, its mountain tribes always remained fiercely independent and central rule was never completely effective. It gained independence as a result of the Balkan Wars in 1912, becoming a rather unstable monarchy under King Zog I in 1928. Invaded by Italy in 1939, it became a Stalinist regime under Enver Hoxha after the Second World War, remaining extremely isolationist in policy and outlook. The Communists lost power to the Democratic Party in elections in 1992.

Albert, Lake /'ælbət/ (also called Lake Mobutu Sese Seko) a lake in the Rift Valley of east central Africa, on the border between Zaire and Uganda. It is linked to Lake Edward by the Semliki river and to the White Nile by the Albert Nile. The lake was named after the Prince Consort by the English explorer Samuel Baker, who in 1864 was the first European to sight it. In 1973 it was renamed in Zaire Lake Mobutu Sese Seko, in honour of that country's President.

Albert, Prince /'ælbət/ (1819–61), consort to Queen Victoria. First cousin of the queen and prince of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, he revitalized the British court in the first twenty years of his wife's reign. He was one of the driving forces behind the Great Exhibition of 1851; its profits allowed the construction of the Royal Albert Hall (1871) and of museum buildings in South Kensington. In 1861, just before his premature death from typhoid fever, his moderating influence was crucial in keeping Britain out of the American Civil War.

Alberta /æl'bɜːtə/ a prairie province in western Canada, bounded on the south by the US and on the west by the Rocky Mountains; capital, Edmonton; pop. (1991) 2,522,300.

Alberti /æl'beətɪ/, Leon Battista (1404–72), Italian architect, humanist, painter, and art critic. He wrote the first account of the theory of perspective in the Renaissance in his Della Pittura (1435). He is also credited with reawakening interest in Roman architecture, after the publication of his De Re Aedificatoria (1485). His own architecture, classical in style, includes the façade of the church of Santa Maria Novella in Florence and San Francesco in Rimini.

Albert Nile the upper part of the Nile flowing through NW Uganda between Lake Albert and the Ugandan–Sudanese border. (See NILE^1.)

Albertus Magnus, St /ælˌbɜːtəs 'mægnəs/ (known as 'Doctor Universalis') (*c.*1200–80), Dominican theologian, philosopher, and scientist. A teacher of St Thomas Aquinas, he was a pioneer in the study of Aristotle and contributed significantly to the comparison of Christian theology and pagan philosophy. His particular interest in the physical sciences, including alchemy, earned him a reputation for magical powers. Feast day, 15 Nov.

albescent /æl'bes(ə)nt/ adj. growing or shading into white. [L albescere albescent- f. albus white] alchemy /'ælkəmɪ/ n. 1 the medieval forerunner of chemistry, esp. as concerned with turning base metals into gold or silver. (See note below.) 2 miraculous transformation or the means of achieving it. □ alchemist n. alchemize v.tr. (also -ise). alchemic /æl'kemɪk/ adj. alchemical adj. alchemically adv. [ME f. OF alkemie, alkamie f. med.L alchimia, -emia, f. Arab. alkīmiyā' f. al the + kīmiyā' f. Gk khēmia, -meia art of transmuting metals]

▪ Alchemy was based on the possible transmutation of all matter, and was far wider in scope than the attempt to turn base metals into gold. It attracted such medieval scholars as Roger Bacon and St Albertus Magnus, and was patronized by princes. Paracelsus (16th century) applied it to the search for a chemical therapy for disease; his followers developed chemical medicines and sought a universal elixir which they dreamed would prolong life and restore youth. The science of chemistry separated slowly from alchemy; many leading scientists, including Newton, retained a belief or interest in transmutation. The rise of mechanical philosophy in the 17th century gradually undermined alchemy; it became an aspect of the occult, its mystical aspects surviving in esoteric movements such as that of the Rosicrucians.

alcheringa /ˌæltʃə'rɪŋgə/ n. = dream-time. [Aboriginal, = dream-time]

Alcibiades /ˌælsɪ'baɪəˌdi:z/ (*c.*450–404 BC), Athenian general and statesman. Educated in the household of Pericles, he became the pupil and friend of Socrates. In the Peloponnesian War he sponsored the unsuccessful Athenian expedition against Sicily, but fled to Sparta after being recalled for trial on a charge of sacrilege. He later held commands for Athens against Sparta and Persia, before his enemies finally forced him from Athens and had him murdered in Phrygia.

Alexander^1 /ˌælɪɡˈzɑːndə(r)/ (known as Alexander the Great) (356–323 BC), son of Philip II, king of Macedon 336–323. He was a pupil of Aristotle. After his succession he invaded Persia, liberating the Greek cities in Asia Minor, and then defeating the Persians in Egypt, Syria, and Mesopotamia. While in Egypt he founded Alexandria, his first and best-known city. He went on to extend his conquests eastwards, taking Bactria and the Punjab. He died of a fever at Babylon, and his empire quickly fell apart after his death. Regarded as a god in his lifetime, he became a model for many subsequent imperialist conquerors of antiquity, and the subject of many fantastic legends.

Alexander^2 /ˌælɪɡˈzɑːndə(r)/ the name of three kings of Scotland:

Alexander I (*c.*1077–1124), son of Malcolm III, reigned 1107–24. During his reign he paid homage to King Henry I of England as his overlord. Nevertheless, he maintained the independence of the Scottish Church from the English Church.

Alexander II (1198–1249), son of William I of Scotland, reigned 1214–49. He generally restored friendly relations with England, negotiating a treaty with King Henry III. He extended royal authority within his own realm, particularly in the western Highlands and the south-west.

Alexander III (1241–86), son of Alexander II, reigned 1249–86. He built up a strong, united, and prosperous kingdom, and succeeded in annexing the Hebrides and the Isle of Man in 1266. His death in a riding accident left Scotland without a male heir to the throne, and plunged the country into three decades of dynastic upheaval and struggle against English domination.

Alexander^3 /ˌælɪɡˈzɑːndə(r)/ the name of three tsars of Russia:

Alexander I (1777–1825), reigned 1801–25. Alexander came to the throne after the murder of his tyrannical father Paul, and pursued reforming policies in education, science, administration, and the system of serfdom. The first half of his reign was dominated by the military struggle with Napoleon, which culminated in the French emperor's unsuccessful invasion of Russia in 1812. In the latter part of his reign Alexander became disillusioned by the failure of the Holy Alliance and less interested in reforms at home.

Alexander II (known as Alexander the Liberator) (1818–81), son of Nicholas I, reigned 1855–81. He introduced a programme of modernization and political and economic reforms, including limited emancipation of the serfs (1861), nationwide construction of railways and schools, and the creation of local government in the provinces (1864). Alexander's harsh suppression of peasant revolts and revolutionary movements led, however, to the hardening of radical opposition in the form of terrorist groups, such as the People's Will, a group of which succeeded in assassinating the tsar with a bomb in Mar. 1881.

Alexander III (1845–94), son of Alexander II, reigned 1881–94. Ascending the throne after his father's assassination, Alexander III fell back on repressive conservatism, heavily centralizing the imperial administration, weakening local government, abolishing autonomous peasant administrations, and persecuting Jews. Although his reign witnessed considerable economic development, his social policies produced a dangerous situation in Russia, which he bequeathed to his doomed son and successor Nicholas II.

Alexander⁴ /ˌælɪɡˈzɑːndə(r)/, Harold (Rupert Leofric George), 1st Earl Alexander of Tunis (1891–1969), British Field Marshal and Conservative statesman. In the Second World War he supervised the evacuation from Dunkirk, the withdrawal from Burma, and the victorious campaigns in North Africa (1943), Sicily, and Italy (1943–5). After the war he became Governor-General of Canada (1946–52) and British Minister of Defence (1952–4).

Alfonso XIII /ælˈfɒnsəʊ/ (1886–1941), king of Spain 1886–1931. Alfonso ruled under the regency of his mother until 1902, during which time Spain lost her colonial possessions in the Philippines and Cuba to the US. In 1923 he supported Miguel Primo de Rivera's assumption of dictatorial powers, but by 1931 Alfonso had agreed to elections. When these indicated the Spanish electorate's clear preference for a republic, the king was forced into exile.

Alfred /ˈælfrɪd/ (known as Alfred the Great) (849–99), king of Wessex 871–99. Alfred's military resistance saved SW England from Viking occupation. He negotiated the treaty giving the Danelaw to the Norsemen (886). A great reformer, he reorganized his land-based garrisons, founded the English navy, issued a new code of laws, introduced administrative and financial changes, revived learning, and promoted the use of English for literature and education.

His contributions proved important for studies of plasmas in stars and in controlled thermonuclear fusion, though he opposed the development of nuclear reactors and weapons. Alfvén shared the Nobel Prize for physics in 1970.

alga /ˈælɡə/ n. (pl. algae /ˈældʒiː, ˈælɡiː/) (usu. in pl.) a primitive non-flowering photosynthetic plant of a large assemblage that includes mainly aquatic forms such as seaweeds and many plankton. Most algae are microscopic and single-celled, and there are also multicellular forms with no vascular tissue or absorbent root system. Algae are now separated into a number of divisions or phyla, partly on the basis of their pigmentation; many (in some schemes, all) of the algae are placed in the kingdom Protista along with protozoans. The primitive blue-green algae are related more to bacteria than to other algae; traces of them are reported in rocks several thousand million years old. The brown algae include the largest and most complex seaweeds, and the green algae are thought to be the ancestors of most land plants. Planktonic algae of various kinds provide the food which supports nearly all marine life. □ algal adj. algoid adj. [L]

Arab. al-jabr f. al the + jabr reunion of broken parts f. jabara reunite]

- Algebra is the generalization of arithmetic to variable or abstract quantities represented by symbols. One of the earliest works on algebra was the Arithmetica by Diophantus of Alexandria (*fl. c.*250 AD). Modern or abstract algebra deals with systems (such as fields, rings, vector spaces, and groups) that consist of elements (typically numbers, vectors, or geometrical transformations) and operations that may be performed with them. Algebra strictly does not include analysis (see ANALYSIS 4).

Algeciras /ˌældʒɪˈsɪərəs/ a ferry port and resort in southern Spain; pop. (1991) 101,365. It lies on the Strait of Gibraltar.

Algeria /ælˈdʒɪərɪə/ a republic on the Mediterranean coast of North Africa; pop. (est. 1991) 25,800,000; official language, Arabic; capital, Algiers. The country extends from the heart of the Sahara Desert to a narrow fertile coastal plain separated from the desert by the Atlas Mountains. Algeria came under nominal Turkish rule in the 16th century, but the native peoples retained much independence, dominating the Barbary Coast until the region was colonized by France in the mid-19th century. Heavily settled by French immigrants, Algeria was for a time closely integrated with metropolitan France, but the refusal of the European settlers to grant equal rights to the native population led to increasing political instability and civil war in the 1950s, and in 1962 the country achieved independence. Many of the French settlers left, damaging the previously prosperous economy, and from 1962 to 1989 the country was a one-party state. A brief period of multi-party democracy was ended by a military takeover in 1992 after the fundamentalist Islamic Salvation Front had won the first round of the national elections. □ Algerian adj. & n.

▪ Alphabetic systems use symbols to represent the sounds in a language (unlike pictographs or Chinese characters) and this makes them the most versatile and economical writing systems available. The origin of the alphabet goes back to the second millennium BC, to the system known as Phoenician, which had twenty-two signs. The systems of modern Hebrew and Arabic came from Phoenician via Canaanite and Aramaic and are virtually without vowels; the Greek alphabet, which emerged in 1000–900 BC, developed two branches, Cyrillic (which became the script of Russian, Ukrainian, etc.) and Etruscan (from which derives the Roman alphabet). The International Phonetic Alphabet attempts to apply strictly the principle of one symbol for one sound. (See also WRITING.)

▪ The Amazons were alleged to exist somewhere on the borders of the known world. Their name was explained by the Greeks as meaning 'without a breast', in connection with a story that they destroyed the right breast so as not to interfere with the use of the bow, but this is probably the popular etymology of an unknown word. They caught the Greek imagination and appear in many legends. Amazons appear as allies of the Trojans in the Trojan War, and their queen, Penthesilea, was killed by Achilles. One of the labours of Hercules was to obtain the girdle of Hippolyta, queen of the Amazons. According to Athenian legend, Attica once suffered an invasion of Amazons, which Theseus repelled.

America /ə'merɪkə/ 1 (also the Americas) a land mass of the New World or western hemisphere, consisting of the continents of North and South America, joined by the Isthmus of Panama. (See note below.) 2 the United States of America.

▪ The date of the first human occupation of the Americas is uncertain; ancestors of the native peoples are believed to have migrated over a land bridge from Siberia between 20,000 and 35,000 years ago, although it may have been earlier. The earliest reliably dated cultural artefacts date from about 12,000 years BP. The NE coastline of North America was visited by Norse seamen in the 8th or 9th century, but, for the modern world, the continent was discovered by Christopher Columbus, who reached the West Indies in 1492 and the South American mainland in 1498. The name of America dates from the early 16th century and is believed to derive from the Latin form (Americus) of the name of Amerigo Vespucci, who sailed along the west coast of South America in 1501.

Americana /əˌmerɪ'kɑ:nə/ n.pl. things connected with America, esp. with the United States.

American Civil War the war between the northern US states (usually known as the Union) and the Confederate states of the South, 1861–5. The war was fought over the issues of slavery and states' rights, and precipitated by the election of Abraham Lincoln, an opponent of slavery, as President. The pro-slavery southern states seceded from the Federal Union and maintained a military resistance to the superior industrial strength of the North for four years. Although its armies won some impressive victories in the first two years of the war, the Confederacy failed to gain foreign recognition and was gradually overwhelmed by superior military might and naval blockade. By the time the main Confederate army surrendered in Apr. 1865, most of the South, including its capital, Richmond, Virginia, had already fallen to Union soldiers.

American English n. the English language as spoken and written in the US. The term North American English is used to refer to the language as used in Canada as well as the US. Specifically American uses of words and meanings fall into a number of categories: adoptions from languages with which the early settlers came in contact (e.g. moccasin, pecan, raccoon from American Indian languages; prairie, shanty from French; corral, lasso, ranch from Spanish; boss, sleigh from Dutch), changes in meaning (e.g. corn, British = cereal plants, American = maize), survivals of 17th–18th-century English (e.g. guess = suppose, fall = autumn, gotten = got), different words for the same referent (elevator = lift, sidewalk = pavement). In addition, there are some notable differences in grammar and construction (e.g. the American to teach school; I just ate; a quarter of ten; she wrote me last week). There are also differences in spelling (e.g. color = colour) and pronunciation. Many American words have come into such general use outside the US (e.g. blizzard, bogus, crank, deadline) that few people realize their transatlantic origin.

American Federation of Labor a federation of North American trade unions, organized largely by craft rather than industry, founded in 1886 and merged in 1955 with the Congress of Industrial Organizations to form the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL–CIO).

American football n. a form of football originating and chiefly played in the US between two teams of eleven players with an oval ball and an H-shaped goal, on a field marked out as a gridiron. Scoring is by points. The modern game developed from 1876 onwards in the colleges and the Rugby Union code was adopted as the basis of the rules. Emphasis is placed on strategy and tactics in both attack and defence, and the game is a contact sport which requires the wearing of helmets and other protective clothing.

American Independence, War of the war of 1775–83, in which the American colonists won independence from British rule. In the US and Canada it is called the American Revolution. It was triggered by resentment at the economic policies of Britain, particularly the right of Parliament to tax the colonies, and by the exclusion of the colonists from participation in political decisions affecting their interests. Following disturbances such as the Boston Tea Party of 1773, fighting broke out at Lexington and Concord in 1775; a year later, in July 1776, the Declaration of Independence was signed. The British were unable to provide sufficient manpower or coordinated leadership to crush the Americans, who gained the support of France and Spain after defeating the British at Saratoga; French sea-power eventually played a crucial role in the decisive surrender of a British army at Yorktown in 1781. The war was ended by the Peace of Paris in 1783 and George Washington became the first President of the US in 1789.

Amis^{1} /ˈeɪmɪs/, Sir Kingsley (1922–95), English novelist and poet. He achieved popular success with his first novel Lucky Jim (1954), a satire on middle-class and academic aspirations set in a provincial university and seen through the eyes of its anti-Establishment hero. Amis's later novels show a more sombre tendency, exemplified in works such as The Folks that Live on the Hill (1990). He won the Booker Prize for his novel The Old Devils (1986). He also published four volumes of poetry.

Amis^{2} /ˈeɪmɪs/, Martin (Louis) (b.1949), English novelist. Son of Kingsley Amis, he published his first novel, The Rachel Papers, in 1973. His other novels include Money (1984) and Time's Arrow (1991). Chiefly set against a background of contemporary urban life, his works are notable for their black humour and inventive use of language, especially slang and dialect.

(See note below.) 2 (in general use) a creature living both on land and in water. 3 an amphibian vehicle. [mod.L amphibium f. Gk amphibion f. AMPHI- + bios life]

- The amphibians typically have an aquatic larval stage with gills (e.g. a tadpole) and an air-breathing four-legged adult stage. There are about 2,400 living species, divided into two main groups: tailless forms (frogs and toads) and those with tails (e.g. newts and salamanders). Amphibians, which evolved from fish in the Devonian period, were the first vertebrates to live on land, preceding the reptiles. Their eggs lack shells and require water or damp conditions to survive, and so, unlike reptiles, amphibians cannot be completely independent of a moist environment.

▪ Attempts at anaesthesia were made from ancient times by stupefying patients with wine or narcotic juices, but it was not until the 1840s that unconsciousness was produced by inhalation of anaesthetic gases in dentistry and surgery. In 1842 an American surgeon, C. W. Long (1815–78), removed a tumour from the neck of a patient who had inhaled ether. Nitrous oxide and chloroform were also used, but all these substances had disadvantages and other anaesthetic agents were sought. Today new materials and methods are constantly being introduced. Anaesthetics may be given as gases, by inhalation; as drugs in solution, by injection or enema; or (for localized effect) sprayed on the skin. Anaesthesia may also be produced by other means, including acupuncture and hypnosis. The introduction of anaesthesia removed the necessity for the surgeon to concentrate on speed, in order to end the patient's ordeal as soon as possible, and widened the scope of surgery enormously.

Anaxagoras /ˌænækˈsægərəs/ (*c.*500–*c.*428 BC), Greek philosopher. He taught in Athens, where his pupils included Pericles. He believed that all matter was infinitely divisible and initially held together in a motionless, uniform mixture until put into a system of circulation directed by Spirit or Intelligence, which created the sky and earth, from which the sun, moon, and stars were formed. His concept of an independent moving cause prepared the way for a fully teleological view of nature.

Anaximander /æˌnæksɪˈmændə(r)/ (*c.*610–*c.*545 BC), Greek scientist, who lived at Miletus. He is reputed to have drawn the earliest map of the inhabited world, to have introduced the sundial into Greece, and to have taught that life began in water and that man originated from fish. He believed that all phenomena result from vortical motion in the primordial substance, and that the earth is cylindrical and poised in space.

Anaximenes /ˌænækˈsɪmɪˌniːz/ (*c.*546 BC), Greek philosopher and scientist, who lived at Miletus. Anaximenes believed the earth to be flat and shallow, and his view of astronomy was a retrograde step from that of Anaximander. He also proposed a theory of condensation and rarefaction, as a means of change from the basic form of matter to the diversity of natural substances.

Andersen /ˈændəs(ə)n/, Hans Christian (1805–75), Danish author. The son of a poor shoemaker, he published several volumes of poetry and was acknowledged in Scandinavia as a novelist and travel writer before publishing the first of his fairy tales. These appeared from 1835 and include 'The Snow Queen', 'The Ugly Duckling', and 'The Little Match Girl'. Although deeply rooted in Danish folklore, the stories were also shaped by Andersen's own psychological alienation. His clear, simple prose set a new style of writing for both children and adults.

Anderson^1 /'ændəs(ə)n/, Carl David (1905–91), American physicist. In 1932, while using a cloud chamber to investigate cosmic rays, he accidentally discovered the positron — the first antiparticle known. He shared the Nobel Prize for physics for this in 1936, and also discovered the muon later the same year.

Anderson^2 /'ændəs(ə)n/, Elizabeth Garrett (1836–1917), English physician. Debarred from entry to medical courses because of her sex, she studied privately and in 1865 obtained a licence to practise from the Society of Apothecaries. In 1866 she opened a dispensary for women and children in London, which later became a hospital; it was renamed the Elizabeth Garrett Anderson Hospital in 1918. In 1870 she received the degree of MD from Paris University. Her influence was considerable in securing the admission of women to professional medical bodies.

Anderson^3 /'ændəs(ə)n/, Marian (1902–93), American operatic contralto. Despite early recognition of her singing talents, racial discrimination meant that she was initially unable to give concerts in her native land. She gained international success from several European tours between 1925 and 1935, but it was not until after her New York début in 1936 that her American career flourished. In 1955 she became the first black singer to perform at the New York Metropolitan Opera.

Anderson^4 /'ændəs(ə)n/, Philip Warren (b.1923), American physicist. He made contributions to the study of solid-state physics, and research on molecular interactions has been facilitated by his work on the spectroscopy of gases. He also investigated magnetism and superconductivity, and his work is of fundamental importance for modern solid-state electronics. He shared the Nobel Prize for physics in 1977.

Andes /'ændi:z/ a major mountain system running the length of the Pacific coast of South America. It extends over some 8,000 km (5,000 miles), with a continuous height of more than 3,000 m (10,000 ft). Its highest peak is Aconcagua, which rises to a height of 6,960 m (22,834 ft). □ Andean /æn'di:ən, 'ændɪən/ adj.

Andorra /æn'dɔ:rə/ a small autonomous principality in the southern Pyrenees, between France and Spain; pop. (est. 1991) 50,000; official languages, Catalan and French; capital, Andorra la Vella. Its independence dates from the late 8th century, when Charlemagne is said to have granted the Andorrans self-government for their help in defeating the Moors. Under a treaty of 1278 the sovereignty of Andorra is shared between the President of France and the Spanish bishop of Urgel. In 1993 the adoption of a formal constitution which legalized political parties was followed by the election of an executive head of government. □ Andorran adj. & n.

Andre /'ɔ:ndreɪ/, Carl (b.1935), American minimalist sculptor. His most famous works are installations created by stacking ready-made units such as bricks, cement blocks, or ceramic magnets according to a mathematically imposed modular system and without adhesives or joints. Andre's Equivalent VIII (1966), which consists of 120 bricks arranged two deep in a rectangle, was the subject of protests in Britain at the alleged waste of public money when it was purchased by the Tate Gallery.

Andrew, Prince /'ændru:/, Andrew Albert Christian Edward, Duke of York (b.1960), second son of Elizabeth II. Educated at Gordonstoun School, Scotland and the Royal Naval College, Dartmouth, he gained a commission in the Royal Marines and in 1982 served as a helicopter pilot in the Falklands War. He married Sarah Ferguson (b.1959) in 1986; the couple were divorced in 1996. They have two children, Princess Beatrice Elizabeth Mary (b.1988) and Princess Eugenie Victoria Helena (b.1990).

Andrew, St /'ændru:/, an Apostle, the brother of St Peter. An apocryphal work dating probably from the 3rd century describes his death by crucifixion; the X-shaped cross became associated with his name during the Middle Ages. Since *c.*750 he has been regarded as the patron saint of Scotland; he is also a patron saint of Russia. Feast day, 30 Nov.

Andrews^1 /'ændru:z/, Dame Julie (born Julia Elizabeth Wells) (b.1935), English actress and singer. Early success in the British and American theatre, including her creation of the role of Eliza Doolittle in My Fair Lady on Broadway (1956), was followed by her film début in Mary Poppins (1964), for which she won an Oscar. Her wholesome appeal and talents as a singer were further displayed in The Sound of Music (1965). In her later films, such as 10 (1979), she moved away from her typecast prim image to play more diverse roles.

Andrews^2 /'ændru:z/, Thomas (1813–85), Irish physical chemist. He is best known for his work on the continuity of the gaseous and liquid states. His discovery of the critical temperature of carbon dioxide suggested that any gas could be liquefied if the temperature was sufficiently low, and he also showed that ozone is an allotrope of oxygen.

Andrić /'ændrɪtʃ/, Ivo (1892–1975), Yugoslav novelist, essayist, and short-story writer. A diplomat turned writer, he wrote his best-known novels while living under voluntary house arrest in German-occupied Belgrade. Set in his native Bosnia, these include The Bridge on the Drina (1945), whose narrative symbolically bridges past and present, as well as Western and Eastern cultures, and Bosnian Chronicle (1945). He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1961.

- In Judaism, Christianity, Zoroastrianism, and Islam, angels are thought of as spiritual messengers or mediators between the sacred and profane realms. Judaic tradition developed a hierarchy of angels which included archangels, seraphim, and cherubim, and subsequent traditions in Christianity were largely based on this (see ORDER n. 19). The Church in the Middle Ages was involved in extensive philosophical speculation and controversy over the substance, form, and nature of angels.

Antarctica /æntˈɑːktɪkə/ a continent round the South Pole, situated mainly within the Antarctic Circle. Antarctica is almost entirely covered by ice sheets; it holds 90 per cent of the world's ice, representing 70 per cent of the world's fresh water. The coastline was explored in the 19th century; in 1911 Roald Amundsen was the first to reach the Pole, and Robert F. Scott reached it a month later. Although there is no permanent human population, Norway, Australia, France, New Zealand, and the UK claim sectors of the continent (Argentina and Chile claim parts of the British sector); its exploitation is governed by an international treaty of 1959, renewed in 1991. (See also POLE^2.)

▪ Interest in the variety of human communities, physical types, and cultures is at least as old as written records, but it was not until the advances of Saint-Simon and Comte in the early 19th century that the foundation for a 'science of humanity' was laid. Modern physical anthropology originated with the evolutionary theories of Darwin, which stimulated European interest in the 'primitive' peoples of the world, who were seen as providing a living laboratory to test theories of physical and cultural evolution. In the second half of the 19th century scholars undertook ambitious comparative research into diverse topics including kinship systems, law, magic and religion, and culture, but their study was still based in the library rather than in the field. At the turn of the present century Émile Durkheim pioneered a shift from evolutionary concerns to the study of the ways in which societies maintain themselves. In the early 20th century, anthropologists such as Bronisław Malinowski in Britain and Franz Boas in the US developed an increasing emphasis on ethnographic fieldwork studies, laying the basis of modern social and cultural anthropology, and in particular utilizing the technique of 'participant observation' (where the anthropologist spends a period living with the community) that has since become the single most important feature distinguishing anthropology from sociology. From the 1950s the work of structuralists such as Claude Lévi-Strauss provided a theoretical framework for the analysis of beliefs and myths in cultural systems, according to which elements or concepts (such as edible/inedible) are arranged in binary opposition.

antibody /ˈæntɪˌbɒdɪ/ n. (pl. -ies) a blood protein produced in response to and counteracting an antigen. Vertebrates develop immunity to infectious disease by the production of antibodies, which function by combining chemically with substances which the body recognizes as alien. This action leads to the destruction and elimination of bacteria, viruses, and foreign substances in the blood. Antibodies are formed a few days after infection and are specific in their action: immunity to diphtheria, for example, gives no protection against tetanus. All antibodies are immunoglobins, with the same basic structure of four polypeptide chains. [transl. G Antikörper (as ANTI-, Körper body)] anti-Semitism /ˌæntɪˈsemɪˌtɪz(ə)m/ n. hostility to or prejudice against Jews. The Jews were dispersed throughout the Mediterranean region from the 8th century BC, especially after the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 AD, and maintained a separate and highly distinct identity, which often made them the subject of intolerance and harassment. Throughout medieval Europe the persecution of Jews was a common response to economic or social crisis, reinforced by religious prejudice and jealousy of the commercial activities of the Jewish community. Christians were forbidden to practise usury, but Jews were permitted to lend money at interest to Christians, and having taken on this role they became associated in the popular mind with extortion. In the late 19th century anti-Semitism crystallized as an explicit doctrine, based on theories of racial determinism, and was subsequently made a major tenet of Nazism, culminating in the Holocaust. Reaction to anti-Semitism gave rise to the Zionist movement and led to the establishment of the state of Israel, which itself created new antagonisms between Jews and Arabs. (See also NAZI, ZIONISM.) □ anti-Semite /-ˈsiːmaɪt, -ˈsemaɪt/ n. anti-Semitic /-sɪˈmɪtɪk/ adj.

antisepsis /ˌæntɪˈsepsɪs/ n. the process of using antiseptics to eliminate undesirable micro-organisms such as bacteria, viruses, and fungi that cause disease. (See also ANTISEPTIC.) [ANTI- + SEPSIS] antiseptic /ˌæntɪˈseptɪk/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 counteracting sepsis esp. by preventing the growth of disease-causing micro-organisms. (See note below.) 2 sterile or free from contamination. 3 lacking character. ● n. an antiseptic agent. □ antiseptically adv.

▪ In 1847 the Hungarian physician Ignaz Semmelweis ordered the use of a disinfectant solution by students attending women in childbirth, but without understanding the underlying cause of infection and without influencing his senior colleagues. In 1865 the antiseptic system was introduced into surgery by Joseph Lister, who worked on Pasteur's discoveries. Until their time the mortality rate from operations was very high because of infection of the exposed tissues, and septicaemia was a major hazard. Lister's methods brought about a revolution. However, antiseptics strong enough to counter infection often also damaged body tissue, and there soon arose aseptic methods, the keeping of wounds free from all contact with harmful micro-organisms.

Antonine /'æntəˌnaɪn/ adj. & n. ● adj. of or relating to the Roman emperors Antoninus Pius and Marcus Aurelius or their rule. ● n. either of the Antonine emperors.

Antonine Wall a defensive fortification about 59 km (37 miles) long, built (AD *c.*140) across the narrowest part of southern Scotland between the Firth of Forth and the Firth of Clyde, in the time of Antoninus Pius. It was intended to mark the frontier of the Roman province of Britain, but the Romans were unable to consolidate their position. In *c.*181 the wall was breached and the northern tribes forced a retreat from the Forth–Clyde frontier, eventually to that established earlier at Hadrian's Wall.

Antoninus Pius /ˌæntəˌnaɪnəs 'paɪəs/ (86–161), Roman emperor 138–61. The adopted son and successor of Hadrian, he was the first of the Antonines. His reign was generally peaceful and he ruled in harmony with the Senate, pursuing a policy of moderation and liberality. Although no great conqueror, he extended the empire; the frontier of Britain was temporarily advanced to the Antonine Wall.

Aquinas, St Thomas /ə'kwaɪnəs/ (known as 'the Angelic Doctor') (1225–74), Italian philosopher, theologian, and Dominican friar. Regarded as the greatest figure of scholasticism, he also devised the official Roman Catholic tenets as declared by Pope Leo XIII. His works include many commentaries on Aristotle as well as the Summa Contra Gentiles (intended as a manual for those disputing with Spanish Muslims and Jews). His principal achievement was to make the work of Aristotle acceptable in Christian western Europe; his own metaphysics, his account of the human mind, and his moral philosophy were a development of Aristotle's, and in his famous arguments for the existence of God ('the Five Ways') he was indebted to Aristotle and to Arabic philosophers. Arabic /'ærəbɪk/ n. the Semitic language of the Arabs, now spoken in much of North Africa and the Middle East. Arabic is related to Hebrew and was originally confined to the Arabian peninsula, but during the Islamic conquests of the 7th century it was carried northwards to Iraq and Syria and westwards to North Africa and Spain; it is now the official language of a number of countries in the Middle East and North Africa, being the native language of some 120 million people. There are many dialects of spoken Arabic but one common written language, which is based on 'classical' Arabic, the written form used in the Middle Ages when Arabic was the universal language of the Near and Middle East. It is the language of the Koran and of medieval Arabian literature, and was the chief medium of scientific and philosophical thought for some centuries, bequeathing to us words such as alcohol, elixir, and zenith. Arabic is written from right to left in a traditional script of uncertain origin, which is used also for a number of other languages. [ME f. OF arabic f. L arabicus f. Gk arabikos] archaeology /ˌɑ:kɪ'olədʒɪ/ n. (US archeology) the study of human history and prehistory through the excavation of sites and the analysis of physical remains. Archaeology, as a systematic discipline, is not much more than a hundred years old. The major methodological advances began in the second half of the 19th century, and the subject has developed at an increasing pace ever since. Excavation to recover evidence is the main activity, and whereas before the 19th century the quest was for objects it is now for information of all kinds. Stratigraphy yields evidence of sequence: in a simple undisturbed series of layers the oldest must be at the bottom and the most recent at the top, although the sequence is rarely so simple, and is likely to show phases of rebuilding, periods of abandonment, etc. Typology (the study of changes in forms of pottery, tools, etc.) can link finds from one site with those of another. Specialists in many fields have essential contributions to make: palaeontology, botany, and geology can all contribute to the dating and interpretation of evidence; in addition the archaeologist can now call on scientific aids (e.g. aerial photography and radiocarbon dating). □ archaeologist n. archaeologize v.intr. (also -ise). archaeologic /ˌo:kɪə'lodʒɪk/ adj. archaeological adj. [mod.L archaeologia f. - With the important exception of Greenland, most of the land in the Arctic is free from snow in the summer. Plants are able to grow (and a number of animals can live on them) even though about a metre below the surface the soil is permanently frozen. Real exploration of Arctic regions began in the 16th century when northern European nations tried to find a way to the rich trade of China and the East Indies by way of a north-east or north-west passage across the Arctic Ocean at a time when the longer but easier routes round Africa and South America were secured by Portugal and Spain. In the 19th century Fridtjof Nansen led the first expedition across Greenland and attention turned to reaching the North Pole over the floating sea-ice; in 1909 the American explorer R. E. Peary was the first person to reach the Pole; the American aviator Richard Byrd claimed to have flown over the North Pole in 1926. As air travel became more regular, flights were made over the polar ice. The last great advance in Arctic travel was the crossing of the polar ocean in 1958 by the US atomic-powered submarine Nautilus, which passed under the ice for 1,600 km (1,000 miles) from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

Arctic Circle the parallel of latitude 66° 33′ north of the equator. It marks the northernmost point at which the sun is visible on the northern winter solstice and the southernmost point at which the midnight sun can be seen on the northern summer solstice.

Argentina /ˌoːdʒənˈtiːnə/ (also the Argentine /ˈoːdʒənˌtaɪn, -ˌtiːn/) a republic occupying much of the southern part of South America; pop. (1991) 32,646,000; official language, Spanish; capital, Buenos Aires. Argentina lies between the Andes foothills and the Atlantic coast, and consists mainly of extensive plains, including the treeless and semi-arid pampas. Before the arrival of Europeans, NW Argentina was part of the Inca empire, the remainder of the region being inhabited by nomadic native peoples. Colonized by the Spanish in the 16th century, Argentina declared its independence in 1816 and played a crucial role in the overthrow of European rule in the rest of South America. The country emerged as a democratic republic in the mid-19th century, but has periodically fallen under military rule. In 1982 the Argentinian claim to the Falkland Islands led to an unsuccessful war with Britain. □ Argentine adj. & n. Argentinian /ˌɑːdʒənˈtɪnɪən/ adj. & n. [Sp., f. -arian /'eərɪən/ suffix forming adjectives and nouns meaning '(one) concerned with or believing in' (agrarian; antiquarian; humanitarian; vegetarian). [L -arius (see -ARY^{1})]

Arianism /'eərɪə,nɪz(ə)m/ n. the principal heresy denying the divinity of Christ, named after its originator, the Alexandrian priest Arius (*c.*250–*c.*336). Arianism maintained that the son of God was created by the Father from nothing and was therefore not coeternal with the Father, nor of the same substance. The heresy was condemned by the Council of Nicaea in 325 and again at Constantinople in 381, but though driven from the Roman Empire it retained a foothold among Germanic peoples until the conversion of the Franks to Catholicism (496).

Aristarchus^{1} /,ærɪ'stɑ:kəs/ (known as Aristarchus of Samos) (3rd century BC), Greek astronomer. Founder of an important school of Hellenic astronomy, he was aware of the rotation of the earth and, by placing the sun at the centre of the universe, was able to account for the seasons. He knew that the sun must be larger than the earth and that the stars must be very distant. Many of his theories were more accurate than those of Ptolemy, which replaced them.

Aristarchus^{2} /,ærɪ'stɑ:kəs/ (known as Aristarchus of Samothrace) (*c.*217–145 BC), Greek scholar. The librarian at Alexandria, he is regarded as the originator of scientific literary scholarship, and is noted for his editions of the writings of Homer and other Greek authors, as well as for commentaries and treatises on their works.

Aristides /,ærɪ'staɪdi:z/ (known as Aristides the Just) (5th century BC), Athenian statesman and general. In the Persian Wars he commanded the Athenian army at the battle of Plataea in 479 BC, and was subsequently prominent in founding the Athenian empire (see DELIAN LEAGUE).

Aristippus /æ'rɪstɪpəs/ (known as Aristippus the Elder) (late 5th century BC), Greek philosopher. He was a native of Cyrene and pupil of Socrates, and is generally considered the founder of the Cyrenaic school, holding that pleasure is the highest good and that virtue is to be equated with the ability to enjoy. His grandson Aristippus the Younger further developed his philosophy.

Aristophanes /,ærɪ'stɒfə,ni:z/ (*c.*450–*c.*385 BC), Greek dramatist. His eleven surviving comedies, characterized by inventive situations and exuberant language, are largely occupied with topical themes; Aristophanes satirizes politicians and intellectuals (e.g. Socrates), and parodies contemporary poets such as Aeschylus and Euripides. Much use is made of political and social fantasy, as exemplified by the city of the birds ('Cloud-cuckoo-land') in the Birds, and by the women's sex-strike for peace in Lysistrata.

Aristotelian /,ærɪstə'ti:lɪən/ n. & adj. ● n. a disciple or student of Aristotle. ● adj. of or concerning Aristotle or his ideas.

Aristotle /'ærɪ,stɒt(ə)l/ (384–322 BC), Greek philosopher and scientist. A pupil of Plato and tutor to Alexander the Great, in 335 BC he founded a school and library (the Lyceum) outside Athens. His surviving written works constitute a vast system of analysis, including logic, physical science, zoology, psychology, metaphysics, ethics, politics, and rhetoric. In reasoning, he established the inductive method. In metaphysics, he rejected Plato's doctrine of forms or ideals; for him form and matter were the inseparable constituents of all existing things. His empirical approach to science is most notable in the field of biology, where he analysed and described the stomach of ruminants and the development of the chick embryo. His work on the classification of animals by means of a scale ascending to man (without implying evolution) was not fully appreciated until the 19th century: Darwin acknowledged a debt to him. The influence of Aristotle in all fields has been considerable: from the 9th century it pervaded Islamic philosophy, theology, and science, and, after being lost to the West for some centuries, became the basis of scholasticism in medieval Christian thought. In astronomy, his proposal that the stars and the planets are composed of a perfect incorruptible element (ether), carried on revolving spheres centred on the earth, was a serious handicap to later thinking.

Armenia /ɑ:'mi:nɪə/ a landlocked country in the Caucasus of SE Europe; pop. (est. 1991) 3,360,000; official language, Armenian; capital, Yerevan. A medieval kingdom, the Armenian homeland fell under Turkish rule from the 16th century. With the decline of the Ottoman Empire Armenia was divided between Turkey, Iran, and Russia. In 1915 the Turks, fearing their Armenian subjects were sympathizing with Russia and the Allies in the First World War, forcibly deported 1,750,000 Armenians to the deserts of Syria and Mesopotamia; more than 600,000 were killed or died on forced marches. Russian Armenia was absorbed into the Soviet Union in 1922 when it became part of the Transcaucasian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, becoming a separate constituent republic of the Soviet Union in 1936. It gained independence as a member of the Commonwealth of Independent States in 1991. Since 1988 there has been conflict with neighbouring Azerbaijan over the ethnically Armenian enclave of Nagorno-Karabakh and the predominantly Azerbaijani territory of Naxçivan.

Armstrong^{1} /ˈoːmstrɒŋ/, Edwin Howard (1890–1954), American electrical engineer. He was the inventor of the superheterodyne radio receiver and the frequency modulation (FM) system in radio. The former involved him in bitter legal wrangles with Lee De Forest. During the 1930s Armstrong developed the FM system, which removed the static that had ruined much early broadcasting, but the radio industry was very slow to accept it. After the war Armstrong was again involved in legal battles to protect his patent, eventually committing suicide.

Armstrong^{2} /ˈoːmstrɒŋ/, (Daniel) Louis (known as 'Satchmo', an abbreviation of 'Satchelmouth') (1900–71), American jazz musician. He learned the cornet in the Waifs' Home in New Orleans, later switching to the trumpet. He played on Mississippi river-boats before forming his own small groups, with which he made some sixty recordings in 1925–8. He later led various big bands, toured internationally, and appeared in many films, including The Birth of the Blues (1941). A major influence on Dixieland jazz, he was a distinctive singer as well as a trumpet player and was noted for his talent for improvisation.

Armstrong^{3} /ˈoːmstrɒŋ/, Neil (Alden) (b.1930), American astronaut. A former fighter pilot and test pilot, he began training as an astronaut in 1962, being appointed to command the Apollo 11 mission, during which he became the first man to set foot on the moon (20 July 1969).

Artaud /ɑːˈtəʊ/, Antonin (1896–1948), French actor, director, and poet. Influenced by Balinese dancing and oriental drama, he sought to return drama to its symbolic and ritualistic roots, developing the concept of the non-verbal Theatre of Cruelty, which concentrated on the use of sound, mime, and lighting. He expounded his theory in a series of essays published as Le Théâtre et son double (1938), but his only play to be based on it was Les Cenci (1935). He was a significant influence on postwar experimental theatre.

Association football n. (also football; also called soccer) a form of football played between two teams of eleven players with a round ball which may not be handled during play except by the goalkeepers. The object of the game is to score goals, by kicking or heading the ball into the opponents' goal. Fouls and transgressions of the rules are punished by the opposition's being awarded a free kick, while a throw-in is given to return a ball played out of the playing area. A ball crossing the goal-line leads to a goal-kick for the defenders or a corner for the attacking team. The game originated in England, and is played according to rules established by the Football Association (founded 1863), which has organized the English major knock-out competition, the FA Cup, since 1872; professional clubs formed the Football League in 1888. The international game is administered by the International Football Federation (FIFA), formed in 1904, which is responsible for the World Cup. Although professional football is particularly strong in Europe and Latin America, Association football is now a truly international sport.

astrolabe /'æstrəˌleɪb/ n. an instrument formerly used to make astronomical measurements, esp. of the altitudes of celestial bodies, and as an aid to navigation. In its earliest form (which dates from classical times) it consisted of a disc with the degrees of the circle marked round its edge, and a pivoted pointer along which a celestial body could be sighted. From late medieval times it was used by mariners for calculating latitude, until replaced by the sextant. [ME f. OF astrelabe f. med.L astrolabium f. Gk astrolabon, neut. of astrolabos star-taking] astrology /ə'strɒlədʒɪ/ n. the study of the movements and relative positions of celestial bodies interpreted as an influence on human affairs. Astrology, long seen as applied astronomy, was developed by the Greeks and reached Christian Europe via the Arabs. It was a utilitarian science linked to medicine and agriculture, as well as an ambitious philosophical system resting on the belief that the stars influence the events of the world and can be used to predict events such as wars, plagues, and the weather. The study of the movements of planets in the zodiac and the disposition of planets at a person's birth gave rise to the study of horoscopes, by which a person's life and character could be mapped with supposed scientific precision. During the Renaissance period popes such as Paul III (1468–1549) were enthusiastic patrons, and many rulers employed court astrologers for both political and medical assistance, Nostradamus (16th century) being the best known. A papal bull of 1586 condemned astrology as used in the prediction of human affairs (so-called judicial astrology), but its decline was slow and many leading scientists in the 17th century believed that it might have at least a residual basis of truth. Though it had lost its intellectual standing in the West by 1700, popular writers such as Old Moore (see MOORE^1) gave it a widespread appeal which has survived to the present day. It retains a more reputable standing in many parts of the East, and has enjoyed a revival in the West in recent years. □ astrologer n. astrologist n. astrological /ˌæstrə'lɒdʒɪk(ə)l/ adj. [ME f. astronomy /ə'strɒnəmɪ/ n. the scientific study of celestial objects, of space, and of the universe as a whole. People have long charted the positions and motions of the sun, moon, planets, and stars, upon which timekeeping and navigation depended. The original naked-eye observations were later refined by the use of the telescope and interpreted by the mathematics of celestial mechanics and positional astronomy. The classification and interpretation of celestial objects depend now on the use of the most sophisticated instruments, including radio telescopes, infrared detectors, and ultraviolet and X-ray satellites, while robot probes are used to visit the sun, planets, moons, and comets of the solar system. □ astronomer n. [ME f. OF astronomie f. L f. Gk astronomia f. astronomos (adj.) star-arranging f. nemō arrange] astrophysics /ˌæstrəʊ'fɪzɪks/ n. the branch of astronomy concerned with the physical nature of celestial objects, especially stars. It applies known physical laws to interpret the observations of astronomers, and reveals new laws operating in extreme conditions of temperature and density not attainable on earth. □ astrophysical adj. astrophysicist /-'fɪzɪsɪst/ n.

Astroturf /'æstrəʊˌtɜ:f/ n. propr. an artificial grass surface, esp. for sports fields. [*Astro*dome, name of a sports stadium in Texas where it was first used, + TURF]

Athens /'æθɪnz/ (Greek Athínai /a'θine/) the capital of Greece; pop. (1991) 3,096,775. A flourishing city-state of ancient Greece from early times, Athens was an important cultural centre in the 5th century BC: this was the time of Euripides, Thucydides, and of Pericles, who commissioned many of the city's best-known buildings such as the Parthenon. Athens suffered defeat in the Peloponnesian War in 404 BC, and eventually came under Roman rule in 146 BC. It remained an important cultural centre until it fell to the Goths in AD 267. After its capture by the Turks in 1456 Athens declined to the status of a village, until chosen as the capital of a newly independent Greece in 1834 following the successful revolt against Turkish rule.

athletics /æθ'letɪks/ n.pl. (usu. treated as sing.) 1 physical exercises, esp. track and field events; the sport of taking part in such exercises or events. (See note below.) 2 US physical sports and games of any kind.

- The sport of athletics can be traced back at least to the Olympic Games in ancient Greece, but when they were abolished in AD 393 the sport became neglected. Evidence exists of athletic contests in England *c.*1154, but organized competitions were not held until the mid-19th century. Since the Olympics were restarted in 1896 athletics has become internationally popular and many other regular competitions are held, including a world championship. At a typical athletics meeting, running or track events include sprints of 100 and 200 metres, middle-distance races of 400, 800, and 1,500 metres, and longer-distance races such as the 5,000 metres; the marathon is also run at major games such as the Olympics. Hurdles, steeplechases, relays, and walking races are also featured. Field events include the high jump, long jump, triple jump, and pole-vault, as well as throwing events such as the shot, discus, javelin, and hammer, and in major competitions the pentathlon and decathlon.

Atlantic, Battle of the a succession of sea-operations during the Second World War in which Axis naval and air forces attempted to destroy shipping carrying supplies from North America to the UK. German U-boats, sometimes assisted by Italian submarines, were the main weapon of attack, and about 2,800 Allied, mainly British, merchant ships were lost. The situation improved for the Allies during 1943 with the deployment of more warships and aircraft to convoy protection, and the introduction of improved radar to detect U-boats on the surface, although the threat was not ended until the capture of the U-boats' bases by Allied land forces in 1944.

Atlantic Charter a declaration of eight common principles in international relations, intended to guide a postwar peace settlement, which was drawn up by Churchill and Roosevelt at a secret meeting off the coast of Newfoundland in Aug. 1941. It stipulated freely chosen governments, free trade, freedom of the seas, and disarmament of current aggressor states, and condemned territorial changes made against the wishes of local populations. In the following month other states, including the USSR, declared their support for these principles. The Atlantic Charter provided the ideological basis for the United Nations organization.

Atlantic Ocean the ocean lying between Europe and Africa to the east and North and South America to the west. It is divided by the equator into the North Atlantic and the South Atlantic oceans. A submarine ridge known as the Mid-Atlantic Ridge runs down the centre from north to south, deep basins lying on either side.

Atlantic Provinces see MARITIME PROVINCES.

Atlantic Standard Time (also Atlantic Time) (abbr. AST) the standard time in a zone including the easternmost parts of mainland Canada, four hours behind GMT.

Atlantis /ət'læntɪs/ a fabled island in the ocean west of the Pillars of Hercules. As described by Plato in the Timaeus, Atlantis was beautiful and prosperous and ruled part of Europe and Africa, but its kings were defeated by the prehistoric Athenians when it attempted to conquer the rest, and it was overwhelmed by the sea. Memories of Atlantic islands or of a great volcanic eruption such as that at Thera (Santorini) may lie behind the story.

Atlas /'ætləs/ Gk Mythol. one of the Titans, who was punished for his part in their revolt against Zeus by being made to support the heavens (a popular explanation of why the sky does not fall). He became identified with the Atlas Mountains. According to a later story Perseus, with the aid of Medusa's head, turned Atlas into a mountain.

atom /'ætəm/ n. 1 a the smallest particle of a chemical element that can exist and still retain its characteristic chemical properties. (See note below.) b (the atom) atoms as the source of nuclear energy. 2 (usu. with neg.) the least portion of a thing or quality (not an atom of pity). □ atom-smasher colloq. = PARTICLE ACCELERATOR. [ME f. OF atome f. L atomus f. Gk atomos indivisible]

- Previously believed to be hard indivisible particles (see ATOMIC THEORY), atoms were shown in the 20th century to have an internal structure and to be capable of division and transformation. Atoms, which are roughly 10^{-8} cm in diameter, are each composed of a positively charged nucleus of about 10^{12} cm diameter consisting of neutrons and protons and containing 99.9 per cent of the atom's mass, surrounded by orbiting negative electrons. Each chemical element is composed of atoms with the same number of protons (see ELEMENT); nuclear transformations, which occur spontaneously in radioactive substances or are induced by collision with other particles, can change atoms of one element into another. In neutral atoms, the number of electrons equals that of the protons. Atoms are held together in molecules by an interaction or sharing of their electrons.

atom bomb n. (also atomic bomb) a bomb which derives its destructive power from the rapid release of nuclear energy by fission of heavy atomic nuclei, with damaging effects caused by heat, blast, and radioactivity. Suitable explosive materials are uranium-235 and plutonium-239. Small masses of such material are stable, but above a critical mass a chain reaction occurs with instantaneous release of energy. The bomb is detonated by a conventional explosive either pushing together two masses of fissile material or compressing a single mass. The first atom bomb to be used in war was exploded by the US 300 m above Hiroshima in Japan on 6 Aug. 1945, the second over Nagasaki three days later, resulting in the surrender of Japan and the end of the Second World War.

atomic theory 1 the theory that all matter is made up of fundamental particles called atoms. (See note below.) 2 the concept of an atom as being composed of subatomic particles. 3 Philos. atomism.

- Atomic theories have been known from antiquity, but the existence of atoms was not definitively verified until the present century. The ancient Greeks tried to explain the complexity of natural bodies and phenomena in terms of the arrangement and rearrangement of tiny indivisible particles, which differed from each other only in size, shape, and motion. The modern atomic theory — that atoms of any one element differ from those of other elements and combine in fixed proportions to form compounds — was propounded by John Dalton, who based it on his work on gases and in particular on the discovery that elements combine in definite proportions. Atoms continued to be regarded as indivisible bodies until their structure was revealed by 20th-century physicists. (See also ATOM.)

Auden /ˈɔːd(ə)n/, W(ystan) H(ugh) (1907–73), British-born poet. Look, Stranger! (1936) is the collection of poems that secured his position as a leading left-wing poet. He supported the Republicans in the Spanish Civil War, and wrote Spain (1937). Auden also collaborated with Christopher Isherwood on several Brechtian verse dramas, notably The Ascent of F6 (1936). After emigrating to America in 1939, he continued to publish volumes of poetry, including The Age of Anxiety (1947), which was awarded the Pulitzer Prize. He also worked on several opera libretti, such as Stravinsky's The Rake's Progress (1951).

Audubon /ˈɔːdəb(ə)n/, John James (1785–1851), American naturalist and artist. He is chiefly remembered for his great illustrated work The Birds of America (1827–38), which was compiled during his travels through America. He portrayed even the largest birds life-size, and painted them not in conventionally formal postures but in dramatic and sometimes violent action. Eventually published in Britain, the book had lasting success, both artistically and as a major contribution to natural history. The National Audubon Society is a North American organization for the study and protection of birds, founded in 1886.

Auer /ˈaʊə(r)/, Carl, Baron von Welsbach (1858–1929), Austrian chemist. Augustan /ɔːˈgʌstən/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 connected with, occurring during, or influenced by the reign of the Roman emperor Augustus, esp. as an outstanding period of Latin literature, including writers such as Virgil, Horace, and Ovid. 2 (of a writer or of a nation's literature) refined and classical in style. (See note below.) ● n. a writer of the Augustan age. [L Augustanus f. Augustus]

- The Augustan age in Britain relates to a period from the late 17th to early 18th centuries, the main figures being Dryden, Pope, Addison, Swift, and Steele. These writers were admirers and conscious imitators of classical poets such as Horace and Virgil and are particularly known for their elegant style and intellectual wit, their use of satire, and their refinement of the heroic couplet. In France, in a slightly earlier period, the principal figures were Molière, Racine, and Corneille.

Augustine /ɔːˈgʌstiːn/ n. an Augustinian friar. [ME f. OF augustin f. L Augustinus: see AUGUSTINIAN]

Augustine, St^1 /ɔːˈgʌstɪn/ (known as St Augustine of Canterbury) (died *c.*604), Italian churchman. Sent from Rome by Pope Gregory the Great to refound the Church in England, he and his party landed in Kent in 597 and were favourably received by King Ethelbert (whose wife was a Christian), who was afterwards converted. Augustine founded the first church and a monastery at Canterbury, and was consecrated as its first archbishop, but failed to reach agreement with representatives of the existing Celtic Church, which still survived in Britain on bases at Iona and Lindisfarne and was at variance with Rome on questions of discipline and practice. Feast day, 26 May.

Augustine, St^2 /ɔːˈgʌstɪn/ (known as St Augustine of Hippo) (354–430), Doctor of the Church. Born in North Africa of a pagan father and a Christian mother, he underwent a series of spiritual crises in his early life, described in his Confessions. While in Milan he was influenced by the bishop, Ambrose, adopting his Neoplatonic understanding of Christianity and being baptized by him in 386. Augustine henceforth lived a monastic life, becoming bishop of Hippo in North Africa in 396. His episcopate was marked by his continual opposition to the heresies of the Pelagians, Donatists, and Manichees. Of his extensive writings, perhaps his best-known work is the City of God. His theology has dominated all later Western theology, with its psychological insight, its sense of man's utter dependence on grace (expressed in his doctrine of predestination), and its conception of the Church and the sacraments. Feast day. 28 Aug.

Augustinian /ˌɔːgəˈstɪnɪən/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 of or relating to St Augustine of Hippo. 2 of or belonging to any of the religious orders following the Rule of St Augustine. (See note below.) ● n. 1 an adherent of the doctrines of St Augustine. 2 a member of an order of Augustinian friars. [L Augustinus Augustine]

- The Rule of St Augustine, a set of instructions for the religious life, was based on the writings of St Augustine of Hippo and widely disseminated after his death. The two main religious orders following this rule were the Augustinian Canons (founded in the 11th century, forming various communities across northern Italy and southern France), and the Augustinian (or Austin) Friars, a mendicant order founded *c.*1250. Martin Luther belonged to a congregation of the latter.

Augustus /ɔːˈgʌstəs/ (born Gaius Octavius; also called (until 27 BC) Octavian) (63 BC–AD 14), the first Roman emperor. Originally called Gaius Octavianus, he took the name Gaius Julius Caesar Octavianus when he was adopted by the will of his great-uncle Julius Caesar in 44

BC. He established his position as one of the triumvirate of 43 BC, gaining supreme power by his defeat of Antony in 31 BC. A constitutional settlement in 27 BC in theory restored the republic but in practice regularized his sovereignty; in the same year he was given the title Augustus (L, = venerable). His rule was marked abroad by a series of expansionist military campaigns and at home by moral and religious reforms intended to restore earlier Roman values disrupted during previous civil wars.

Aung San /aʊŋ ˈsæn/ (1914–47), Burmese nationalist leader. A leader of the radicals from his student days, during the Second World War he accepted Japanese assistance and secret military training for his supporters. Returning to Burma in 1942 he became leader of the Japanese-sponsored Burma National Army, which defected to the Allies in the closing weeks of the war in the Pacific. As leader of the postwar Council of Ministers, in Jan. 1947 he negotiated a promise of full self-government from the British; in July he and six of his colleagues were assassinated by political rivals during a meeting of the Council.

Aung San Suu Kyi /aʊŋ ˌsæn suː ˈtʃiː/ (b.1945), Burmese political leader. Daughter of Aung San, she became the co-founder and leader of the National League for Democracy (NLD), the country's main opposition party, in 1988. Although she was placed under house arrest in 1989 and not allowed to stand as a candidate, the NLD won 80 per cent of the seats in the democratic elections of 1990; the ruling military government refused to recognize the NLD's victory. A supporter of political reform through non-violent public protest and democratic processes, she was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1991. She was released from house arrest in 1995.

Austen /'ostɪn/, Jane (1775–1817), English novelist. The seventh of eight children of a Hampshire rector, she was greatly stimulated by her extended and affectionate family. Her major novels are Sense and Sensibility (1811), Pride and Prejudice (1813), Mansfield Park (1814), Emma (1815), Northanger Abbey (1818), and Persuasion (1818). They are notable for skilful characterization and penetrating social observation; Austen brings a dry wit and satirical eye to her portrayal of middle and upper-class life, capturing contemporary values and moral dilemmas.

Austin^{1} /'ostɪn/ the state capital of Texas; pop. (1990) 465,620. First settled in 1835, it was named in 1839 after Stephen F. Austin, son of Moses Austin, leader of the first Texas colony.

Austin^{2} /'ostɪn/, Herbert, 1st Baron Austin of Longbridge (1866–1941), British motor manufacturer. Having joined the Wolseley Sheep Shearing Machine Company in 1893, Austin persuaded the company to embark on the manufacture of cars. He produced vehicles with them until 1905, when he opened his own works near Birmingham. The output of the factory steadily increased, especially following the launch of the Austin Seven (known as 'the Baby Austin') in 1921; 300,000 models of this car were produced before 1939.

Austin^{3} /'ostɪn/, John (1790–1859), English jurist. Regarded as the founder of analytical jurisprudence, he was greatly influenced by the utilitarianism of his friend Jeremy Bentham, as can be seen from his work The Province of Jurisprudence Determined (1832). An important influence on the English legal system, Austin is significant for his strict delimitation of the sphere of law and its distinction from that of morality, as well as his examination of the connotations of such common legal terms and ideas as right, duty, liberty, injury, and punishment.

Austin^{4} /'ostɪn/, John Langshaw (1911–60), English philosopher. A lecturer and later professor of moral philosophy at Oxford University (1952–60), he was a careful and witty exponent of the linguistic school of philosophy, seeking to elucidate philosophical problems by analysis of the words in which they are expressed. Two of his courses of lectures were published posthumously in 1962: Sense and Sensibilia discusses perception, while How to Do Things with Words distinguishes 'performative' utterances (in which something is done, such as promising or making marriage vows) from utterances that convey information.

Australia /o'streɪlɪə/ an island country and continent of the southern hemisphere, in the SW Pacific, a member state of the Commonwealth; pop. (est. 1991) 17,500,000; official language, English; capital, Canberra. Much of the continent has a hot dry climate and a large part of the central area is desert or semi-desert; the most fertile areas are the eastern coastal plains and the south-western corner of Western Australia. Human habitation in Australia dates from prehistoric times, but most of the population is now of European descent, with the aboriginal peoples forming only about 1.5 per cent of the population (see ABORIGINAL n. 2). In Europe, the idea of an unknown southern land (terra australis) had been current since the times of the ancient Greek geographers. Pre-17th-century European sightings of Australia are claimed but not firmly attested. From 1606 onwards its western coast was explored by the Dutch, and in 1642 Tasman proved that it was an island. It was visited by an Englishman, William Dampier, in 1688 and 1699. In 1770 Captain James Cook landed at Botany Bay on the eastern side of the continent and formally took possession of New South Wales. British colonization began in 1788, as did the transportation of convicts, which was discontinued in 1868. The interior was gradually explored and opened up in the 19th century and political consolidation resulted in the declaration of a Commonwealth in 1901, when the six colonies (New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia, and the offshore island of Tasmania) federated as sovereign states. Northern Territory achieved similar status in 1978. Australia played a major role on the side of the Allies in each of the two world wars. [L (terra) australis (as AUSTRAL)]

Australian Rules football n. (also Australian Rules, Australian National football) a form of football played by teams of eighteen players on a large oval pitch with a ball similar to that used in rugby. Australian Rules football is a fast-moving, high-scoring game dating back to 1858. Players may run with the ball as long as they bounce it every nine metres. The ball may be passed forward, but in that case must be punched rather than thrown. There are four goalposts at each end: a goal, scored between the two inner posts, counts six points; a behind, scored between the outer posts, counts one point.

Austria /'ostrɪə/ (called in German Österreich) a republic in central Europe; pop. (est. 1991) 7,700,000; official language, German; capital, Vienna. Austria is largely mountainous, with the River Danube flowing through the north-east. For a time part of the Roman Empire (the Danube forming the frontier), Austria was overrun by Germanic peoples in the 5th century AD. It was dominated from the early Middle Ages by the Habsburg family, and became the centre of a massive central European empire (see also AUSTRIA–HUNGARY). The empire's collapse in 1918 left Austria a weak and unstable country, which was incorporated within the Nazi Reich in 1938. After the Second World War the country fell under Allied military occupation, regaining its sovereignty in 1955. A referendum in 1994 approved Austria's entry into the European Community. □ Austrian adj. & n.

Austria–Hungary /ˌostrɪə'hʌŋgərɪ/ (also called Austro-Hungarian empire) the so-called Dual Monarchy, established by the Austrian emperor Franz Josef after Austria's defeat by Prussia in 1866, according to which Austria and Hungary became autonomous states under a common sovereign. The dualist system came under increasing pressure from the other subject nations, including Croatians, Serbs, Slovaks, Romanians, and Czechs, and failure to resolve these nationalist aspirations was one of the causes of the First World War. The empire was dissolved by the Versailles peace settlement of 1919.

Austrian Succession, War of the a group of several related European conflicts (1740–8) triggered by the death of the Emperor Charles VI and the accession of his daughter Maria Theresa in 1740 to the Austrian throne. Austria, supported by Hungary, the Netherlands, and Great Britain, was involved in a struggle with Bavaria, Saxony, and Spain, all of which had rival claimants to the throne, and Prussia, which had territorial designs on parts of the Austrian empire. France came in on the side of Bavaria and Prussia. As a result of the war, Prussia obtained Silesia from Austria, while Maria Theresa kept her throne. (See also PRAGMATIC SANCTION.)

- The Aztecs, a Chichimec people, arrived in the central valley of Mexico after the collapse of the Toltec civilization in the 12th century, and by the 16th century they commanded a territory of tribute-paying states that covered most of the central and southern part of present-day Mexico. Their rulers (the last and most famous of whom was Montezuma) tended to be despotic, and captives taken in war were offered as sacrifices to the Aztec gods. They are also famous for their rich and elaborate civilization: when the Spaniards under Cortés arrived they found a society centred on the city of Tenochtitlán, which boasted vast pyramids, temples, and palaces with fountains.

Babbage /ˈbæbɪdʒ/, Charles (1791–1871), English mathematician, inventor, and pioneer of machine computing. His interest in the compilation of accurate mathematical and astronomical tables led to his design for a mechanical computer or 'difference engine' (in which he was assisted by Byron's daughter, Ada Lovelace), which would both perform calculations and print the results. Because of practical and financial difficulties neither this machine nor a subsequent analytical engine was finished in Babbage's lifetime (though construction of one began in London in the 1990s). His analysis of the postal service led to the introduction of the penny post; he also invented the heliograph and the ophthalmoscope.

Bach /bɑːx/, Johann Sebastian (1685–1750), German composer. An exceptional and prolific composer, he was known in his own lifetime chiefly as an organist; it was not until almost a century after his death that his position as an outstanding representative of the German musical baroque was fully appreciated. His compositions range from violin concertos, suites, and the six Brandenburg Concertos (1720–1) to many clavier works and more than 250 sacred cantatas. His large-scale choral works include The Passion according to St John (1723), The Passion according to St Matthew (1729), and the Mass in B minor (1733–8); through these and other liturgical works Bach expressed his devout Protestant faith in the Lutheran tradition. Of his twenty children, his eldest son Wilhelm Friedemann Bach (1710–84) became an organist and composer, Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach (1714–88) wrote much church music, more than 200 keyboard sonatas, and a celebrated treatise on clavier-playing, and Johann Christian Bach (1735–82) became music-master to the British royal family and composed thirteen operas and many instrumental works.

Bacon[1] /ˈbeɪkən/, Francis, Baron Verulam and Viscount St Albans (1561–1626), English statesman and philosopher. The pre-eminent legal figure of the late Elizabethan and early Stuart periods, he eventually rose to become Lord Chancellor under James I before falling from favour after impeachment on charges of corruption. His radical philosophical beliefs, especially as expounded in The Advancement of Learning (1605) and Novum Organum (1620), proved very influential, dominating the field for a century after his death. He advocated the inductive method and rejected the formulation of a priori hypotheses; his views were instrumental in the founding of the Royal Society in 1660.

Bacon[2] /ˈbeɪkən/, Francis (1909–92), Irish painter. Having settled permanently in England in 1928, he first came to public prominence with the triptych Three Studies for Figures at the Base of a Crucifixion (1944), which depicts the Furies as monstrous semi-human figures. He often drew inspiration from photographs, film stills, or from other paintings; from the late 1950s his work chiefly depicted human figures in grotesquely distorted postures, their features blurred or erased, and set in confined interior spaces.

Bacon[3] /ˈbeɪkən/, Roger (*c.*1214–94), English philosopher, scientist, and Franciscan monk. Bacon taught at Oxford and Paris; although widely acclaimed in scholarly circles he fell foul of his own order, which eventually imprisoned him as a heretic because of his interest in science. Bacon is most notable for his work in the field of optics and for emphasizing the need for an empirical approach to scientific study. He is also said to have prophesied flying machines and described the manufacture of gunpowder.

bacterium /bækˈtɪərɪəm/ n. (pl. bacteria /-rɪə/) a member of a large group of unicellular micro-organisms lacking organelles and an organized nucleus, some of which can cause disease. Bacteria are widely distributed in soil, water, and air, and on or in the tissues of plants and animals. Formerly included in the plant kingdom, they are now classified separately (as prokaryotes) from organisms with nucleated cells, to which they are thought to be ancestral. The chemical changes which many of them bring about are vital to life on earth, and include all forms of decay and the incorporation of atmospheric nitrogen into organic compounds. Classification of bacteria is problematic because they are so uniform in shape, usually spherical (cocci) or rodlike (bacilli). Multiplication is usually by simple fission, though some form spores. Because of the rapid growth rate and ease of culture of bacteria, much modern biochemical knowledge has been derived from their study. Bacteria were first observed by Antoni van Leeuwenhoek in the 17th century, and first definitely implicated in a disease (anthrax) by Robert Koch in 1876. □ bacterial adj. [mod.L f. ▪ The Baha'i faith was founded by the Persian Baha-ullah (1817–92) and his son Abdul Baha (1844–1921). The central tenet of the faith is that the essence of all religions is one; thus all religious teachers are the messengers of one God. Its adherents, who are now found in most countries of the world, work for the peace and unification of humankind, but almost from the religion's inception they have been persecuted, especially in Iran. The seat of its governing body is in Haifa in Israel, adjacent to the golden-domed shrine of the Bab (see BABISM).

Bahamas /bə'ho:məz/ a country consisting of an archipelago off the SE coast of Florida, part of the West Indies; pop. (1991) 254,680; languages, English (official), Creole; capital, Nassau. It was there that Columbus made his first landfall in the New World (12 Oct. 1492). The islands were depopulated in the 16th century as the Spaniards carried off most of the Arawak inhabitants to slavery and death. In 1648 a group of English Puritans settled there, and the islands were a British colony from the 18th century until they gained independence within the Commonwealth in 1973.

Balkan Mountains a range of mountains stretching eastwards across Bulgaria from the Serbian frontier to the Black Sea. The highest peak is Botev Peak (2,375 m; 7,793 ft).

Balkans, the /ˈbɔːlkənz/ the countries occupying that part of SE Europe lying south of the Danube and Sava rivers, forming a peninsula bounded by the Adriatic and Ionian Seas in the west, the Aegean and Black Seas in the east, and the Mediterranean in the south. From the 3rd to the 7th centuries the peninsula, nominally ruled by the Byzantine emperors, was invaded by successive migrations of Slavs. In 1356 the Turkish invasions began, Constantinople falling to the Ottoman Turks in 1453. The subject peoples, though largely retaining their languages and religions, did not recover independence until the 19th century. In 1912–13 Turkey was attacked and defeated by an alliance of Balkan states, which broke up in fighting over the territory gained (see BALKAN WARS). After the First World War the peninsula was divided between Greece, Albania, Bulgaria, and Yugoslavia, with Turkey retaining only a small area including Constantinople (Istanbul). In 1991–3 the former federal republic of Yugoslavia broke up, the constituent republics of Serbia and Montenegro retaining the name 'Yugoslavia' while Slovenia, Croatia, Macedonia, and Bosnia-Herzegovina became independent against a background of civil conflict. □ Balkan adj. & n.

Balkan Wars two wars of 1912–13 that added to the tension in the Balkans before the First World War. In the first (1912), Bulgaria, Serbia, Greece, and Montenegro formed a league and attempted to seize the remaining European territories of the Ottoman Empire, forcing Turkey to give up Albania and Macedonia, leaving the area around Constantinople (Istanbul) as the only Ottoman territory in Europe. The second war was fought in 1913: Bulgaria disputed with Serbia, Greece, and Romania for possession of Macedonia, which was partitioned between Greece and Serbia.

- Ballet developed in Renaissance Italy and flowered in France at the court of Louis XIV. It was at first a very formal spectacle which involved singing and speech as well as dance, performed by courtiers wearing flowing costumes and high heels; it was not until the early 19th century that the costumes, steps, positions, and techniques of ballet in its best-known forms developed. The great schools of romantic and classical ballet appeared in the 19th century. The former is represented by ballets such as La Sylphide (1832) and Giselle (1841), for which the technique of dancing on the tips of the toes (sur les pointes) was adopted. Classical ballet was perfected by the Russian Imperial Ballet under the choreographer Marius Petipa, whose Sleeping Beauty (1890), to music by Tchaikovsky, exemplifies the school. The early 20th century was dominated by the productions of Diaghilev's Ballets Russes, involving the collaboration of dancers, choreographers, stage designers, and composers. The work of the American dancer Isadora Duncan, who abandoned the traditional role of ballet as a narrative art for one of subjective response directly to the music, was also important (see MODERN DANCE). Classical ballet today flourishes particularly in Russia, notably in the Bolshoi and Kirov companies. A distinctively British style developed in the work of British choreographers such as Ninette de Valois with the Vic-Wells (later Sadler's Wells) Ballet and Frederick Ashton and Kenneth Macmillan (1929–92), who were particularly associated with the Royal Ballet. In the US, Diaghilev's influence was also profound, and led to the founding of such schools as the School of American Ballet (1934) and the New York City Ballet (1948), with which George Balanchine was particularly associated. Among the most famous 20th-century dancers were Vaslav Nijinsky, Alicia Markova, Rudolf Nureyev, Margot Fonteyn, and Mikhail Baryshnikov.

Ballets Russes /ˌbæleɪ ˈruːs/ a ballet company formed in Paris in 1909 by the Russian impresario Sergei Diaghilev, which had a revolutionary impact in the ballet world and beyond. In place of the conventions of classical ballet was a unified whole encompassing music, dance, decor, and costume; music was commissioned from the composers Stravinsky, Satie, and Rimsky-Korsakov, and Cocteau, Bakst, and Picasso designed sets. Choreographers and dancers who worked with the company include Michel Fokine, Anna Pavlova, Vaslav Nijinsky, Léonide Massine, and later George Balanchine. The Ballets Russes performed in Europe until Diaghilev's death in 1929, but never appeared in Russia.

▪ A small hot-air balloon was demonstrated in Lisbon as early as 1709, but attracted little attention. Manned flight was achieved in a balloon on 21 Nov. 1783, when two Frenchmen, Pilâtre de Rozier and the Marquis d'Arlandes, were airborne for 25 minutes under a hot-air balloon built by the Montgolfier brothers, covering more than 8 km (5 miles). By the end of the 19th century flights had been made across the English Channel and the Alps, and the sport was so fashionable in London as to be rated a social grace, although it lapsed at the end of the Edwardian era with the arrival of heavier-than-air flight. Interest in ballooning has recently revived.

Anchored balloons were used by Napoleon as observation posts in some battles, while barrage balloons were arranged around cities in protective cordons to deter bombing attacks in the First and Second World Wars. Free balloons, both manned and unmanned, have had important functions in atmospheric research and weather prediction.

(See note below.) ● adj. of or relating to these peoples or languages. [Bantu, = people]

- Bantu languages belong to the Niger-Congo language group, and there are more than 400 of them (with over 100 million speakers), of which Swahili, Xhosa, and Zulu are the most important. Their chief characteristics are the distinctiveness of high and low tones, the complex system of noun classes, often based on distinctions in meaning, and graduations of tense, with two or even four degrees of past. Most Bantu languages were not written down until the 19th century. Arabs trading along the coast had brought their Arabic script, which was used for Swahili, but elsewhere the Roman alphabet has been adopted, sometimes with additional characters. Linguistic evidence suggests that the original home of these languages may have been in the Cameroon region. Bantu-speaking people are thought to have migrated to southern Africa via the lake region of East Africa by the 3rd century AD, possibly introducing iron metallurgy to southern Africa at the time of their entry.

- Baptists form one of the largest Protestant bodies, with a present-day membership over 30 million. The first group was founded in Amsterdam in 1609 by the exiled English dissenter John Smyth (*c.*1554–1612), some of whose followers returned to London and established a Baptist Church in England. Churches arising from this were known as General Baptists, believing that anyone can be saved; those founded by a group of Calvinists, who held that salvation was only for a particular few, were known as Strict or Particular Baptists. Rigid Calvinism was gradually modified, and the two groups had largely merged by the end of the 19th century.

(See note below.) 2 of or relating to this period. ● n. 1 the baroque style. 2 baroque art collectively. [F (orig. = 'irregular pearl') f. Port. barroco, of unkn. orig.]

▪ The term is used to refer to the dominant European style of art and architecture between mannerism and rococo, characterized by dramatic and ornate detail, encompassing both grandeur and exuberance. The baroque is particularly associated with the Catholic Counter-Reformation and the reign of Louis XIV. Important figures include the Italian artists Caravaggio, Carracci, and Bernini; in northern Europe, Rubens is considered the leading exponent. In architecture, the baroque is exemplified in grand designs such as the palace at Versailles as well as in the work of Vanbrugh and Wren in England.

In music, the baroque period is generally taken as *c.*1600–1750. It was a time of stylistic and formal change, encompassing the formation of the orchestra and the origination of opera and the symphony, concerto, sonata, oratorio, and cantata. Major baroque composers include Vivaldi, Bach, and Handel.

Barrie /ˈbærɪ/, Sir J(ames) M(atthew) (1860–1937), Scottish dramatist and novelist. His Scottish background provided the setting for several novels, including The Little Minister (1891). He abandoned fiction for the theatre in the early 1900s, gaining success with comedies such as The Admirable Crichton (1902) and Dear Brutus (1917). However, Barrie's most famous play is Peter Pan (1904), a fantasy for children about a boy who would not grow up. Barrie bequeathed the copyright of this to the Great Ormond Street Children's Hospital in London.

barrow[2] /ˈbærəʊ/ n. a mound of earth constructed in ancient times to cover one or more burials. The earliest barrows in NW Europe date from the late 5th and 4th millenniums BC and were elongated in shape (they are often called long barrows). In the late 4th millennium BC round barrows came into use, and continued to be constructed intermittently up to the 10th century AD. The somewhat uniform appearance that these monuments tend to display today belies a wide range of burial practices and construction techniques. A barrow is often marked on maps of Britain as tumulus. [OE beorg f. Gmc]

Barry /ˈbærɪ/, Sir Charles (1795–1860), English architect. Having studied architecture during visits to Italy, France, and Greece (1817–20), he established his reputation with his Italianate design of the Travellers' Club in Pall Mall, London (1830–2). In 1836 he won a competition to design the new Houses of Parliament after the old buildings had been destroyed by fire; it was designed in the Perpendicular style, with most of the detail and internal fittings contributed by A. W. N. Pugin. Work on the building began in 1840 and continued after Charles Barry's death, his son Edward Middleton Barry (1830–80) completing the project.

Barrymore /ˈbærɪˌmɔː(r)/ an American family of actors. Lionel (1878–1954) withdrew from a successful career in the theatre in 1925 and devoted himself to films; these included A Free Soul (1931), for which he won an Oscar, and Grand Hotel (1932). His sister, Ethel (1879–1959), was also an actress; she gave notable stage performances in The Second Mrs Tanqueray (1924) and The Corn is Green (1942), and won an Oscar for her part in the film None But the Lonely Heart (1944). Their brother, John (1882–1942), was a light comedian as well as a serious actor; his most celebrated role was on stage as Hamlet, both in New York (1922) and in London (1925).

Barth[1] /bɑːθ/, John (Simmons) (b.1930), American novelist and short-story writer. He is known as a writer of complex, elaborate, experimental novels, including The Sot-Weed Factor (1960), a fantastic parody of an 18th-century picaresque tale, and Giles Goat-Boy (1966), a satirical allegory of the modern world conceived in terms of a university campus; Letters (1979) consists of correspondence exchanged by characters from his previous novels.

Barth[2] /bɑːt, bɑːθ/, Karl (1886–1968), Swiss Protestant theologian. Under the shadow of the First World War he was led to a radical questioning of contemporary religious thought and in 1919 published his seminal work Epistle to the Romans. A rebuttal of liberal 19th-century Protestant theology, the book established a neo-orthodox or theocentric approach. He emphasized the supremacy and transcendence of God and the dependence of man on divine grace, and stressed that the teachings of Christ as related in the Bible were the only route to an understanding of God. His work had its greatest impact in the 1930s, but it exerts a continuing influence on Protestant theology today.

Barthes /bɑːt/, Roland (1915–80), French writer and critic. Barthes was a leading exponent of structuralism in literary criticism and cultural analysis. In the 1950s and 1960s, he spearheaded the nouvelle critique, which challenged the traditional approach of literary criticism. His iconoclastic work On Racine (1963) is still a subject of controversy amongst literary critics. Barthes was increasingly drawn to the theory of semiotics after Mythologies (1957), his critique of contemporary culture, proceeding to define the theory in further detail in Elements of Semiology (1964). Later works, such as the essay 'The Death of the Author' (1968) and S/Z (1970), which stress the role of the reader in constructing a text, were influential in the development of deconstruction and post-structuralism.

Bartók /ˈbɑːtɒk/, Béla (1881–1945), Hungarian composer. While his early work reflects the influence of Liszt, Wagner, Brahms, and Richard Strauss, he later developed an original musical language; basically homophonic and harmonically adventurous, his music is often percussive and owes much to Hungarian folk music, which he began to record, notate, and classify in 1904. His work includes six string quartets (1908–39), three piano concertos (1926; 1930–1; 1945), Concerto for Orchestra (1943), and an opera, Duke Bluebeard's Castle (1911). He emigrated to America in 1940 because of political pressures in Hungary.

Bartolommeo /ˌbɑːtɒləˈmeɪəʊ/, Fra (born Baccio della Porta) (*c.*1472–1517), Italian painter. A Dominican friar, he worked chiefly in Florence and made visits to Venice and Rome, where he was much impressed with the work of Raphael and Michelangelo. His work particularly displays the influence of the former, as is demonstrated in the balance of his compositions and the use of rapt expressions and significant gestures. Notable works are The Vision of St Bernard (1507) and The Mystic Marriage of St Catherine (1511).

Baruch /ˈbɑːrʊk/ a book of the Apocrypha, attributed in the text to Baruch, the scribe of Jeremiah (Jer. 36).

[F base or L basis stepping f. Gk]

▪ In chemistry the term base is a more general one than alkali, which is often restricted to soluble substances that liberate hydroxide ions. Bases are generally thought of as the opposite of acids, with which they react to form salts. In chemistry bases are sometimes more widely defined as compounds which are acceptors of hydrogen ions or protons, or donors of electron pairs.

baseball /'beɪsbɔːl/ n. 1 a game played between two teams of nine with long straight bats and a ball, on a diamond-shaped circuit of four bases which the batsman must complete. (See note below.) 2 the ball used in this game.

▪ Baseball, played as a summer sport chiefly in the US and Canada, is thought to have developed from rounders in the 19th century; the first rules were drawn up in 1845 and the first professional league was formed in the US in 1871. The teams bat and field alternately, each team having nine innings (an inning ends when three players of the batting side are out) and aiming to score more runs than the opposition. A run is scored by hitting the ball out of reach of the fielders and running between the bases until reaching the home base. A batter is out if he or she fails to hit three consecutive balls bowled by the pitcher or if the ball is thrown to and caught by the fielder guarding the base to which the batter is running. Batters can also be caught out, or be 'tagged' or touched when running by a fielder holding the ball. The major baseball competition is the World Series.

basic oxygen process n. a steel-making process in which a jet of oxygen is delivered by a lance on to a molten mixture of pig-iron and scrap steel in a retort lined with a basic refractory. Excess carbon is burnt away, producing enough heat to keep the iron molten, and the oxidized impurities escape as gases or float to the surface as lime-rich slag. The process was developed in the 1950s in Austria and is now the major means of steel production in many countries. It combines the low cost of the Bessemer process with the high-quality product of the open-hearth process, and can convert 400 tonnes of molten iron into steel in about twelve minutes. (See also STEEL.)

basidium /bə'sɪdɪəm/ n. (pl. basidia /-dɪə/) a microscopic spore-bearing structure produced by certain fungi. [mod.L f. Gk basidion dimin. of BASIS]

(See note below.) ● adj. of, relating to, or denoting the Basques or their language. [F f. L Vasco -onis]

- Culturally the Basques are one of the most distinct groups in Europe. While they do not differ physically from other European groups, their language, Basque, is not a member of the Indo-European language family and is not demonstrably related to any other known language. An ergative language with agglutination, it is currently spoken by close on 1 million people in the Pyrenees, although it is now rarely an individual’s sole language; out of a number of dialects a standard language is developing. The Basque people were largely independent until the 19th century, and retained some local autonomy in Spain until the end of the Civil War, in which most of the Basque Country opposed Franco’s Nationalist forces. In the 1960s the Basque separatist movement ETA began an armed struggle against the Spanish government, which continues, although some degree of local autonomy was granted to the Basques after Franco’s death. There is also a French equivalent to ETA, Iparretarrak (‘fighters from the North Side’).

Baudelaire /ˈbəʊdəˌleə(r)/, Charles (Pierre) (1821–67), French poet and critic. An associate and champion of Manet and Delacroix, he began his literary career writing art criticism and reviews, but is now largely known for Les Fleurs du mal (1857), a series of 101 lyrics in a variety of metres. In these he explores his sense of isolation, exile, sin, boredom, and melancholy, as well as the attraction of evil and vice and the fascination and degradation of Parisian life. He died in poverty and obscurity, and it was only in the later years of the 19th century that his importance to the symbolist movement was recognized.

Bauhaus /ˈbaʊhaʊs/ a school of design established by Walter Gropius in Weimar, Germany in 1919, which had its origins in the Weimar School of Art and Crafts. The school's style is characterized by an emphasis on functionality and simplicity of form and which played a key role in establishing the relationship between design and industrial techniques. Although some of its teachers (such as Paul Klee and Wassily Kandinsky) were painters, the school is perhaps best known for its designs of objects for utilitarian use. The socialist principles on which Bauhaus ideas rested incurred the hostility of the Nazis and, after moving to Berlin in 1932, the school was closed in 1933. The resultant movement abroad of teachers and pupils (for example, Mies van der Rohe and Josef Albers) ensured the international dissemination of its style and ideas. Bax /bæks/, Sir Arnold (Edward Trevor) (1883–1953), English composer. A lasting sympathy for the Celtic revival, particularly of Irish literature, fostered in him an enduring love of Ireland's scenery and folk-song. This is expressed musically in works such as An Irish Elegy (1917) for English horn, harp, and strings. Tintagel (1917) and his other tone poems are the best known of his works today, but he also composed seven symphonies, chamber works, songs, and choral music.

Baxter /ˈbækstə(r)/, James K(eir) (1926–72), New Zealand poet, dramatist, and critic. He published more than thirty books of poems; his early lyric poetry focuses on the New Zealand landscape and its influence on its inhabitants. A convert to Roman Catholicism, in Jerusalem Sonnets (1970) he develops a fluid sonnet form to express his spirituality; Autumn Testament (1972) reflects his humanistic socialism. His criticism includes Aspects of Poetry in New Zealand (1967).

Bayeux Tapestry /baɪ'jɜ:/ a fine example of medieval English embroidery (it is not really a tapestry), executed between 1066 and 1077, probably at Canterbury, for Odo, bishop of Bayeux and half-brother of William the Conqueror, and now exhibited at Bayeux in Normandy. It is 48 cm (19 in.) wide and, although incomplete, 70 m (230 ft) long. In seventy-nine scenes, accompanied by a Latin text and arranged like a strip cartoon, it tells the story of the Norman Conquest and the events that led up to it. It is an important historical record, relating incidents not recorded elsewhere, and is particularly valuable for the information it reveals about military tactics and equipment.

Beatles, the /ˈbiːt(ə)lz/ a pop and rock group from Liverpool, England, consisting of George Harrison, John Lennon, Paul McCartney, and Ringo Starr (born Richard Starkey). The Beatles are remembered for the quality and stylistic diversity of their songs (mostly written by Lennon and McCartney), for their irreverent wit, and for the hysteria, known as 'Beatlemania', that their early performances aroused. They found success with their first single, 'Love Me Do', in 1962, and released many more hits including 'She Loves You' (1963) and 'Help' (1965) before retiring from live performances to work with producer George Martin on the more sophisticated and experimental albums Revolver in 1966 and Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band in 1967. The group split up acrimoniously in 1970. In 1995 the surviving members of the group released new material based on tapes recorded by John Lennon.

Becket, St Thomas à /ˈbekɪt/ (*c.*1118–70), English prelate and statesman. A close and influential friend of Henry II, he served as his Chancellor and in 1162 became Archbishop of Canterbury, a position Becket accepted with reluctance, foreseeing the inevitable conflict of interests between the king and the Church. He soon found himself in open opposition to Henry, first on a matter of taxation and later over the coronation of Henry's son, and the king in anger uttered words which led four knights to assassinate Becket in his cathedral on 29 Dec. The murder aroused indignation throughout Europe, miracles were soon reported at his tomb, and Henry was obliged to do public penance there. The shrine became a major centre of pilgrimage until its destruction under Henry VIII (1538). Feast day, 29 Dec.

Beckett /ˈbekɪt/, Samuel (Barclay) (1906–89), Irish dramatist, novelist, and poet. A permanent resident in France from the mid-1930s, he is best known for his plays, especially Waiting for Godot (1952). A seminal work in the Theatre of the Absurd, the play was highly influential during the postwar period, especially for Beckett's use of dramatic narrative and symbolism. His later works were increasingly short and enigmatic. Beckett was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1969.

Beckford /ˈbekfəd/, William (1759–1844), English writer. He inherited a large fortune from his father, which he spent lavishly. He travelled in Europe, collected works of art and curios, and commissioned the building of Fonthill Abbey in Wiltshire, a Gothic folly, where he lived in seclusion 1796–1822. He is remembered as the author of the fantastic oriental romance Vathek (1786, originally written in French).

Beckmann^{1} /ˈbekmən/, Ernst Otto (1853–1923), German chemist. Beckmann devised a method of determining a compound's molecular weight by measuring the rise in boiling-point of a solvent containing the compound. For this he designed an accurate thermometer with an adjustable range. He also discovered a rearrangement reaction important in organic synthesis.

Beckmann^{2} /ˈbekmən/, Max (1884–1950), German painter and graphic artist. Beckmann was an expressionist and his paintings typically reflect his first-hand experience of human evil during the First World War; a characteristic work is The Night (1919), a torture scene in which contemporary social conditions are portrayed with powerful symbolism. Beckmann was dismissed from his teaching post in Frankfurt by the Nazis in 1933; the same year he painted Robbery of Europe. In 1937 his work was denounced as 'degenerate' and he fled to Holland, before going to the US in 1947.

▪ There are about 12,000 species of bee, most of which are solitary. The genus Apis includes four species of honey bee, including the familiar A. mellifera which was domesticated around the end of the neolithic period. The storage of honey allows honey bee colonies to survive through the winter; it remained the only sweetener for human consumption until the introduction of sugar. Human beings have also found many uses for beeswax, and bees perform a vital role in plant pollination. Social bee colonies have a complex caste structure and behaviour, based on pheromones (see SOCIAL).

Beethoven /'beɪtəʊv(ə)n, 'beɪtˌhəʊ-/, Ludwig van (1770–1827), German composer. Pre-eminently an instrumental composer, he reinvigorated the forms of sonata, symphony, and concerto that had matured during the latter part of the 18th century, reshaping them and expanding their terms of reference. Despite increasing deafness, he was responsible for a prodigious musical output; his work includes nine symphonies (such as the Eroica of 1804, originally dedicated to his hero Napoleon), thirty-two piano sonatas, sixteen string quartets, the opera Fidelio (1814), and the Mass in D (the Missa Solemnis of 1823). In the piano sonatas of 1816–22 and the string quartets of 1824–6 the old structural forms are merely implicit; in his Ninth Symphony (1824) he broke with precedent altogether in the finale by introducing voices to sing Schiller's Ode to Joy. With his expansion of 18th-century forms and techniques in his earlier work, and the personal emotion and individuality of his later works, he is often seen as bridging the classical and romantic movements.

Begin /ˈbeɡɪn/, Menachem (1913–92), Israeli statesman, Prime Minister 1977–83. A member of Irgun 1943–8, following Israel's independence he founded the Herut Party (which evolved from Irgun) and served as leader of the opposition 1948–67. In 1973 he took up the position of joint chairman of the Likud coalition, becoming Prime Minister in 1977, when the Likud party was successful at the polls. His hard line on Arab–Israeli relations, particularly with regard to retaining territories occupied by Israel during the Arab–Israeli War (1967), softened in a series of meetings with President Sadat of Egypt. The result was a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel; the two leaders shared the Nobel Peace Prize in 1978.

Beijing /beɪˈdʒɪŋ/ (also Peking /piːˈkɪŋ/) the capital of China, in the north-east of the country; pop. (1990) 6,920,000. The ancient settlement was first developed as the capital of a dynastic kingdom between the 5th and 3rd centuries BC. Over the succeeding centuries it was destroyed, rebuilt, and renamed by successive conquering peoples, until Kublai Khan developed his capital on the site in the late 13th century. During the period of Mongol rule it served as the political centre for the whole of China, finally becoming the country's capital in 1421, at the start of the Ming period. Invaded once again in the 17th century by the Manchus, it became the Qing capital, surviving as the capital of the Republic of China after the revolution of 1912. At the centre of modern Beijing lies the Forbidden City, containing the former imperial palaces, to which entry was forbidden to all except the members of the imperial family and their servants. Belize /beˈliːz/ a country on the Caribbean coast of Central America; pop. (est. 1991) 190,800; languages, English (official), Creole, Spanish; capital, Belmopan. The British settled there in the 17th century, proclaiming the area (as British Honduras) a Crown Colony in 1862. It adopted the name Belize (after a river with a Mayan name meaning 'muddy water') in 1973, and in 1981 became an independent Commonwealth state. Guatemala, which bounds it on the west and south, has always claimed the territory on the basis of old Spanish treaties, although in 1992 it agreed to recognize the existence of Belize. □ Belizean adj. & n.

Bell^{1} /bel/ Alexander Graham (1847–1922), Scottish-born American scientist and inventor. Bell studied sound waves, the mechanics of speech, and speech therapy. Having moved to the US in the early 1870s, he developed his ideas for transmitting speech electrically, and gave the first public demonstration of the telephone in 1876; he founded the Bell Telephone Company the following year. He also invented the gramophone (1897) as a successful rival to Thomas Edison's phonograph. He later carried out research in a number of other areas, including hydrofoil speedboats and aeronautics.

Bell^{2} /bel/, Currer, Ellis, and Acton, the pseudonyms used by Charlotte, Emily, and Anne Brontë.

Bell^{3} /bel/, Gertrude (Margaret Lowthian) (1868–1926), English archaeologist and traveller. She travelled widely as a field archaeologist in the Middle East, acquiring an extensive knowledge of the desert Arabs and local politics, and undertook liaison work with the Arabs for the British government in 1915. A supporter of Arab independence, she assisted in the negotiations for Iraq's independence (1920–1) in her capacity as Oriental Secretary to the British High Commissioner. Her writings include a description of her travels in Syria, The Desert and the Sown (1907).

Bellini^{1} /beˈliːnɪ/ a family of Italian painters. Jacopo (*c.*1400–70) was trained by Gentile da Fabriano; his elder son Gentile (*c.*1429–1507) was prominent as a portraitist and narrative painter. Jacopo's younger son Giovanni (*c.*1430–1516) is the most famous of the family; he had a large workshop of pupils and assistants and transformed the family's native Venice into a major centre of Renaissance painting. Stylistically he was influenced by his brother-in-law Mantegna, although his painting is less severe than Mantegna's and has a serene contemplative quality. Giovanni Bellini's work in the 15th and early 16th centuries is dominated by madonnas and other sacred subjects (such as The San Giobbe Altarpiece, 1480). In works such as The Agony in the Garden (*c.*1460), Giovanni Bellini also made a significant contribution towards the treatment of figures within a landscape. He continued to develop as an artist, in later life painting the newly fashionable pagan themes (such as Feast of the Gods, 1514) and mysterious allegories, his work reflecting the influence of his pupils Giorgione and Titian.

Bellini^{2} /beˈliːnɪ/, Vincenzo (1801–35), Italian composer. Of his eleven operas, the most famous are La Sonnambula (1831), Norma (1831), and I Puritani (1835). His work is typically dramatic and lyrical, displays a close relationship between the music and libretto, and is characterized by long, elegant melodies, such as 'Casta Diva' from Norma.

Belloc /ˈbelɒk/ (Joseph) Hilaire (Pierre René) (1870–1953), French-born British writer, historian, and poet, of French-British descent. A devout Roman Catholic, he collaborated with his friend G. K. Chesterton in works often critical of modern industrial society and socialism.

notably in The Servile State (1912). His writings include biographies of Napoleon and Cromwell, but he is now best known for his light verse, such as The Bad Child's Book of Beasts (1896) and Cautionary Tales (1907).

Bellow /ˈbeləʊ/, Saul (b.1915), Canadian-born American novelist, of Russian-Jewish descent. A leading figure in mid-20th century American fiction, he has written novels as diverse as the comic The Adventures of Augie March (1953) and the more sombre and semi-autobiographical Herzog (1964). His other works include the collection of short stories Him with His Foot in His Mouth (1984). His fiction is both ironic and optimistic in its treatment of the human condition. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1976.

Benedict, St /ˈbenɪdɪkt/ (*c.*480–*c.*550), Italian hermit. A hermit from the age of 14, he attracted many followers by his piety; of these he chose the most devoted to form twelve small monastic communities, ultimately establishing a monastery at Monte Cassino (*c.*540). His Regula Monachorum (known as the Rule of St Benedict), austere but tempered by moderation, formed the basis of Western monasticism. Feast day, 11 July (formerly 21 Mar.).

Benedictine n. & adj. ● n. 1 /ˌbenɪˈdɪktɪn/ a monk or nun of an order following the Rule of St Benedict. (See note below.) 2 /ˌbenɪˈdɪktiːn/ propr. a liqueur based on brandy, orig. made by Benedictines in France. ● adj. /ˌbenɪˈdɪktɪn/ of St Benedict or the Benedictines. [F bénédictine or mod.L benedictinus f. Benedictus Benedict]

- The Rule of St Benedict, established at Monte Cassino in Italy in the mid-6th century, was gradually adopted by most Western monastic houses, sometimes with their own modifications. Relaxations of discipline were followed by attempts at reform, and resulted in the formation of separate orders, such as the Cistercians and Cluniacs, which remained largely independent of any wider organization. The Benedictines were of particular importance in establishing medieval social organization in the period after the fall of the Roman Empire, preserving ideals of scholarship, and maintaining or restoring the use of art in liturgical worship.

Bergius /ˈbɜːgɪəs/, Friedrich Karl Rudolf (1884–1949), German industrial chemist. He is best known for his process for producing petroleum and other hydrocarbons from coal dust, using hydrogen and a catalyst under high pressure. He also made a type of coal by carbonizing peat, achieved the complete hydrolysis of cellulose, and developed industrial processes for synthesizing phenol and ethylene glycol. Bergius shared the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1931.

Bergman^{1} /ˈbɜːgmən/, (Ernst) Ingmar (b.1918), Swedish film and theatre director. His work is characterized by his use of haunting imagery and a symbolism often derived from Jungian dream analysis. He came to international fame with the film Smiles of a Summer Night (1955) and achieved further worldwide success with The Seventh Seal (1956) and Wild Strawberries (1957). An important theatre director, he has directed many of his players in both media.

Bergman^{2} /ˈbɜːgmən/, Ingrid (1915–82), Swedish actress. She made her name on stage and screen in Sweden before embarking on an international career in Hollywood in the 1930s. Although her film career was a long one, it is probably for her romantic role opposite Humphrey Bogart in Casablanca (1942) that she is best known. Other notable films include For Whom the Bell Tolls (1943) and Anastasia (1956); she received an Oscar for the latter, as well as for her role in Murder on the Orient Express (1974).

Bergson /ˈbɜːgs(ə)n, French bɛrksɔn/, Henri (Louis) (1859–1941), French philosopher. His philosophy is dualistic, dividing the world into life (or consciousness) and matter. In his most famous work, Creative Evolution (1907), he attacked scientific materialism and rejected the Darwinian theory of evolution. He proposed instead that life possesses an inherent creative impulse (élan vital), the continuous operation of which as it seeks to impose itself upon matter leads to the production of new forms. Bergson's work influenced writers such as Marcel Proust and George Bernard Shaw; he was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1927.

Beria /ˈberɪə/, Lavrenti (Pavlovich) (1899–1953), Soviet politician and head of the secret police (NKVD and MVD) 1938–53. Born in Georgia, he rose to prominence within the Soviet Communist Party under Stalin's patronage. As head of the secret police Beria was directly involved in the infamous 'purge trials' in which Stalin's opponents were eliminated; he was also responsible for the deportation of thousands to forced labour camps. After Stalin's death he was rumoured to be planning to seize power; feared by rival politicians, he was arrested. Although his fate is not certain, it was officially announced that he had been tried and shot as a traitor.

Bering /ˈbeərɪŋ/, Vitus (Jonassen) (1681–1741), Danish navigator and explorer. At the instigation of Peter the Great he led several Russian expeditions aimed at discovering whether Asia and North America were connected by land. He sailed along the coast of Siberia and in 1741 reached Alaska from the east. On the return journey his ship was wrecked and he died on an island which now bears his name. Also named after him are the Bering Sea and Bering Strait.

Bering Sea an arm of the North Pacific lying between NE Siberia and Alaska, bounded to the south by the Aleutian Islands. It is linked to the Arctic Ocean by the Bering Strait. Both the sea and the strait are named after Vitus Bering.

Bering Strait a narrow sea passage, which separates the eastern tip of Siberia from Alaska, and links the Arctic Ocean with the Bering Sea. At its narrowest point it is about 85 km (53 miles) wide. During the Ice Age, as a result of a drop in sea levels, the area formed a bridge of land between the two continents, allowing migration of plants and animals.

Berio /ˈberɪəʊ/, Luciano (b.1925), Italian composer. A serialist, he has often adopted an experimental approach to groupings of instruments and singers, the use of electronic sound, and the combination of live and pre-recorded music. His works include Circles (1960), for singer, harp, and percussion, a series of Sequences (1958–75) for virtuoso solo instruments, and the opera Un Re in Ascolto (1984).

Berkeley^{2} /ˈbɜːklɪ/, Busby (born William Berkeley Enos) (1895–1976), American choreographer and film director. As a leading Broadway dance director, he was introduced to films by Samuel Goldwyn, for whom he choreographed Whoopee (1930). In films such as the Gold Diggers series (1922–37) and Babes in Arms (1939), he quickly became famous for his spectacular and dazzling sequences in which huge casts of rhythmically moving dancers formed kaleidoscopic patterns on the screen.

Berkeley^{3} /ˈbɑːklɪ/, George (1685–1753), Irish philosopher and bishop. His idealist philosophy is set out in his major works A Treatise Concerning the Principles of Human Knowledge (1710) and Three Dialogues between Hylas and Philonous (1713). He denied the existence of matter, holding that there are only minds and mental events; material objects exist solely by being perceived. To the objection that objects would leap in and out of existence according to whether they were being looked at, he replied that God perceives everything, and that this gives objects — ideas in the mind of God — a continuous existence. He held this to be a sound argument for the existence of God.

berkelium /bɜːˈkiːlɪəm, ˈbɜːklɪəm/ n. an artificial radioactive metallic chemical element (atomic number 97; symbol Bk). A member of the actinide series, berkelium was first produced by Glenn Seaborg and his colleagues in 1949 by bombarding americium with helium ions. [f. BERKELEY^{1} (where first made)]

Berlin^{1} /bɜːˈlɪn/ the capital of Germany; pop. (est. 1990) 3,102,500. Founded in the 13th century, it was a seat of the Hohenzollern princely family and capital of Prussia. At the end of the Second World War the city was occupied by the Allies, and divided into two parts: West Berlin, comprising the American, British, and French zones, later a state of the Federal Republic of Germany, forming an enclave within the German Democratic Republic; and East Berlin, the zone of the city occupied by the USSR and later capital of the German Democratic Republic. Between 1961 and 1989 the Berlin Wall separated the two sectors, which were reunited in 1990; occupation formally ended in 1994.

Berlin^{2} /bɜːˈlɪn/, Irving (born Israel Baline) (1888–1989), Russian-born American songwriter. He had no formal musical training, but began writing songs when he was 16; in 1911 he had a hit with 'Alexander's Ragtime Band'. Thereafter he contributed to many musical shows, revues, and films, including Annie Get Your Gun (1946) and Holiday Inn (1942); the latter contained the song 'White Christmas', sung by Bing Crosby, which proved to be one of the best-selling records of all time. Berlin also wrote 'God Bless America' (1939), which became the unofficial national anthem of the US.

Berlin airlift an operation by British and American aircraft to airlift food and supplies to Berlin in 1948–9. The city was being blockaded by Russian forces attempting to isolate it from the West and terminate the joint Allied military government of the city. After the blockade was lifted the city was formally divided into East and West Berlin.

Bernadette, St /ˌbɜːnəˈdet/ (born Marie Bernarde Soubirous) (1844–79), French peasant girl. Her visions of the Virgin Mary in Lourdes in 1858 led to the town's establishment as a centre of pilgrimage. Bernadette later became a nun and she was canonized in 1933. Feast day, 18 Feb.

Bernadotte^{1} /ˌbɜːnəˈdɒt/, Folke, Count (1895–1948), Swedish statesman. A member of the Swedish royal family, Bernadotte gained a reputation as a neutral arbiter in international disputes. As vice-president of the Swedish Red Cross during the Second World War, he arranged the exchange of prisoners of war, and in 1945 acted as an intermediary between Himmler and the Allies, conveying a German offer of capitulation. Charged with the role of UN mediator in Palestine in 1948, he was assassinated by the Stern Gang.

Bernadotte^{2} /ˌbɜːnəˈdɒt/, Jean Baptiste Jules (1763–1844), French soldier. One of Napoleon's marshals, he was adopted by Charles XIII of Sweden in 1810 and became king (as Charles XIV) in 1818, thus founding Sweden's present royal house.

Bernard /beəˈnɑː(r)/, Claude (1813–78), French physiologist. Bernard used animal experiments to show the role of the pancreas in digestion, the method of regulation of body temperature, and the function of nerves supplying the internal organs. He realized that the constant composition of the body fluids was essential for the optimal functioning of the body, discovered the biological importance of glycogen, and investigated the action of curare.

Bernard, St /ˈbɜːnəd/ (*c.*996–*c.*1081), French monk. He founded two hospices to aid travellers in the Alps. The St Bernard passes, where the hospices were situated, and St Bernard dogs, once kept by the monks and trained to aid travellers, are named after him. Feast day, 28 May.

Bernard of Clairvaux, St /ˈbɜːnəd, kleəˈvəʊ/ (1090–1153), French theologian and abbot. He was the first abbot of Clairvaux in France; his monastery there became one of the chief centres of the Cistercian order. Enjoying papal favour, he was an important religious force in Europe, and the Cistercian order grew rapidly under his influence. He was noted for his asceticism, severity, and eloquence; his preaching at the council of Vézelay in 1146 instigated the Second Crusade; he had the French theologian Peter Abelard condemned for heresy. Feast day, 20 Aug.

Berne /bɜːn/ (also Bern) 1 a canton of Switzerland. 2 its capital, the capital of Switzerland; pop. (1990) 134,620. Founded in the late 12th century, it entered the Swiss Confederation in 1353. It was made the capital of Switzerland in 1848. □ Bernese adj. & n.

Berne Convention an international copyright agreement of 1886, later revised. The US has never been party to it.

Bernhardt /ˈbɜːnhɑːt/, Sarah (born Henriette Rosine Bernard) (1844–1923), French actress. Internationally acclaimed and regarded as the greatest tragic actress of her day, she gained her first major successes in 1872, playing Cordelia in King Lear and the queen in Victor Hugo's Ruy Blas. She was noted for her clear voice, magnetic personality, and great beauty; of all her performances, she is probably best known for her portrayal of Marguerite in La Dame aux camélias by Alexandre Dumas fils. The amputation of a leg in 1915 after an accident did not diminish her activity and she continued to act in seated roles.

Bernini /beəˈniːnɪ/, Gian Lorenzo (1598–1680), Italian sculptor, painter, and architect. An outstanding figure of the Italian baroque, Bernini is notable for the vigour, movement, and dramatic and emotional power of his works. Using a variety of materials, including stucco, stone, and marble, he fused sculpture, architecture, and painting into a decorative whole. Working chiefly in Rome, he became architect to St Peter's in 1629, for which his work included the great canopy over the high altar and the colonnade round the piazza in front of the church. One of his most famous sculptures is The Vision of St Teresa (1644–67) in the church of Santa Maria della Vittoria in Rome.

Bernoulli /bɜːˈnuːɪ/ a Swiss family that produced many eminent mathematicians and scientists. Jakob (Jacques or James) Bernoulli (1654–1705) made discoveries in calculus, which he used to solve minimization problems, and he contributed to geometry and the theory of probabilities. His brother Johann (Jean or John, 1667–1748) also contributed to differential and integral calculus. Both were professors of mathematics at Basle. Daniel Bernoulli (1700–82), son of Johann, was professor of mathematics at St Petersburg and then held successively the chairs of botany, physiology, and physics at Basle. Although his original studies were in medicine, his greatest contributions were to hydrodynamics and mathematical physics.

Bernstein /ˈbɜːnstiːn, -staɪn/, Leonard (1918–90), American composer, conductor, and pianist. As a conductor, he worked with the New York

Philharmonic Orchestra (1945–8 and 1957–69) and toured extensively. As a composer, he encompassed a wide range of forms and styles in his music; his large instrumental and choral works often juxtapose a romantic intensity with jazz and Latin American elements. His best-known compositions include the symphony The Age of Anxiety (1947–9), the musical West Side Story (1957), and film music such as that for On the Waterfront (1954).

Berra /ˈberə/, Yogi (born Lawrence Peter Berra) (b.1925), American baseball player. He was especially famous as a catcher with the New York Yankees in the 1950s and early 1960s, setting the record for the most home runs (313) by a catcher in the American League. He became known in the US for his pithy sayings such as (on baseball) 'You can't think and hit at the same time'. The cartoon character Yogi Bear (1958) is popularly believed to have been named after Berra, though the animators deny that this was their intention.

Berry^{1} /ˈberɪ/ a former province of central France; chief town, Bourges.

Berry^{2} /ˈberɪ/, Chuck (born Charles Edward Berry) (b.1931), American rock and roll singer, guitarist, and songwriter. One of the first great rock and roll stars with a large teenage following, he first had a hit with 'Maybellene' (1955); this was followed by 'Johnny B Goode' and 'Sweet Little Sixteen' (both 1958). His recording career was interrupted by a period of imprisonment (1962–4); although he continued to release albums throughout the 1970s and 1980s, his only major hit single during that time was 'My Ding A Ling' (1972). His music had a significant influence on the development of rock music; British pop and rock groups such as the Beatles and the Rolling Stones are particularly indebted to him.

Bessel /ˈbes(ə)l/, Friedrich Wilhelm (1784–1846), German astronomer and mathematician. Self-taught in navigation and astronomy, he rose to become director of the new observatory in Königsberg. He determined the positions of some 75,000 stars, and was the first to obtain accurate measurements of stellar distances using the parallax resulting from the earth's changing position. Bessel worked intensively on the orbits of planets and binary stars, developing mathematical functions that are named after him. Following a study of the orbit of Uranus he predicted the existence of an eighth planet.

Bessemer /ˈbesɪmə(r)/, Sir Henry (1813–98), English engineer and inventor. Bessemer is best known for the steel-making process that bears his name. At the time of the Crimean War in the 1850s, his proposals for the redesign of guns received little encouragement in Britain but a great deal from Napoleon III. The material available for gun construction was inadequate, however, so Bessemer then worked on a series of experiments and patents in the search for stronger material.

Bessemer process n. a steel-making process in which carbon, silicon, and other impurities are removed from molten pig-iron by oxidation in a blast of air. The process was invented by Henry Bessemer, after earlier work by the iron manufacturer William Kelly (1811–88) in the US. By 1860 Bessemer had evolved his converter, a large pivoting steel vessel lined with a refractory material. When the vessel is horizontal it is loaded with molten pig iron. With the axis vertical a blast of air is blown through the converter, the reaction with oxygen removing impurities as waste gases and slag. After removal of molten slag from the surface and the addition of manganese or other additives the converter is tilted to pour out the finished steel. It was the first successful method of making steel in quantity at low cost, so enabling it to be used on a large scale, but has been replaced by more modern techniques (see STEEL).

Best^1 /best/, Charles Herbert (1899–1978), American-born Canadian physiologist. His employer, Professor J. J. R. Macleod, placed him with F. G. Banting to assist in his research on pancreatic extracts. The research team announced the discovery of insulin in 1922 (see BANTING). Unlike the others, Best was not awarded a Nobel Prize in 1923, but Banting shared half the prize money with him. He succeeded Banting as director of the Banting and Best Department of Medical Research at the University of Toronto in 1941, a post which he retained until 1967.

Best^2 /best/, George (b.1946), Northern Irish footballer. He joined Manchester United soon after leaving school and later played for Northern Ireland. An attacking winger with exceptional ball control, he was the leading scorer in the First Division in the 1967–8 season; he won a European Cup winners' medal and was named European Footballer of the Year in 1968. Unable to overcome a succession of personal and other problems in the late 1960s, his career as a top footballer came to a premature end soon after.

[ME f. OF f. eccl.L biblia f. Gk biblia books (pl. of biblion), orig. dimin. of biblos, bublos papyrus]

- The Old and New Testaments have traditionally been regarded by Christians as having a unique divine authority; in addition, some Churches, including the Roman Catholic Church, accept the Apocrypha. Although there was some allegorical interpretation, even after the inception of the modern scientific movement (16th and 17th centuries) both Protestants and Catholics persevered in a belief in the literal truth of the Bible's assertions on matters not only of history, doctrine, and ethics but also of cosmology and natural science. It was not until the 19th century that critical study began to examine the historical perspective of the Bible and the circumstances and purpose of its compilation; more recently, however, many fundamentalist groups, particularly in the US, having a belief in the literal truth of the Bible, have become prominent. Though the Bible had been translated into Old English, the first medieval English translation, instituted by John Wyclif at the end of the 14th century, was opposed by the Church, and it was not until the Reformation that the Bible was again available in the vernacular: Tyndale printed the New Testament in English in 1525–6 and Miles Coverdale's translation of the Bible appeared in 1535, Martin Luther's German translation of the New Testament having appeared in 1522. The most famous English translation is probably the Authorized Version or King James Bible of 1611. This formed the basis for the Revised Version, first published in 1881. There are now translations of all or part of the Bible in more than 1,750 languages.

BI- + Gk kuklos wheel]

▪ A two-wheeled conveyance (called a velocipede) was patented in Germany in 1817: the rider sat on a bar between the wheels, and progressed by pushing the ground with each foot alternately. A system of propulsion by treadles appeared *c.*1840, and pedals were added (to the front wheel) in 1861. The early bicycle was a cumbersome and uncomfortable machine, with a heavy frame and iron tyres; it was often known as a boneshaker. Springs, wire-spoke wheels, and solid rubber tyres were introduced in the 1860s, and the front wheel was made much larger (the 'ordinary' bicycle or penny farthing). In the late 1870s 'safety' bicycles with two medium-sized wheels and with the rider's seat set further back appeared, and the successful Rover safety bicycle of 1884–5, with smaller wheels and with a toothed gearwheel connected by an endless chain with the hub of the rear wheel, was essentially the modern machine. Pneumatic tyres were introduced by John Dunlop in 1888. The next significant development did not take place until 1962, when the cross-frame bicycle was introduced, having small wheels and with one large tube as the main horizontal member. More recently the sturdy, lightweight mountain bike, with rugged tyres and often more than twenty gears, has become popular, and new designs with carbon-fibre frames are being introduced.

▪ Billiards has been played at least since the 16th–17th centuries, when it was a sport of British and French royalty. There have been public tables since the mid-17th century, although they were banned for a time in the mid-18th century because the game had acquired associations with gambling and a dissolute life. Early tables were made entirely of wood, later with an iron top, until the fabric-covered slate top was introduced *c.*1826. Balls were propelled with a mace (a stick with a flat square head) until the straight cue was introduced in the early 19th century. The phenomenal skill of the Australian player Walter Lindrum (1898–1960) defied competition (especially in the early 1930s), and helped to kill the game in favour of pool, where there is a greater element of chance. The most popular form of this in Britain is snooker.

Binet /'bi:neı/, Alfred (1857–1911), French psychologist and pioneer of modern intelligence testing. He was requested to devise a test which would detect intellectually slow schoolchildren, and together with the psychiatrist Théodore Simon (1873–1961) he produced tests (now known as Binet or Binet–Simon tests) intended to examine general reasoning capacities rather than perceptual-motor skills. Believing that bright and dull schoolchildren were simply advanced or retarded in their mental growth, Binet devised a mental age scale which described performance in relation to the average performance of students of the same physical age.

binge /bındʒ/ n. & v. sl. ● n. a spree; a period of uncontrolled eating, drinking, etc. ● v.intr. (bingeing or binging) go on a spree; indulge in uncontrolled eating, drinking, etc. [prob. orig. dial., = soak] binturong /'bıntjʊˌrɒŋ/ n. a large southern Asian civet, Arctictis binturong, with a shaggy black coat and a prehensile tail. [Malay] bio /'baıəʊ / n. & adj. ● n. 1 biology. 2 (pl. bios) biography. ● adj. biological. [abbr.]

bio- /'baıəʊ/ comb. form 1 life (biography). 2 biological (biomathematics). 3 of living beings (biophysics). [Gk bios (course of) human life]

bioassay /ˌbaıəʊə'seı, -'æseı/ n. measurement of the concentration or potency of a substance by its effect on living cells or tissues. [BIO- + ASSAY] biochemistry /ˌbaıəʊ'kemıstrı/ n. the study of the chemical and physico-chemical processes of living organisms. □ biochemical adj. biochemically adv. biochemist n.

biocoenosis /ˌbaıəʊsi:'nəʊsıs/ n. (US biocenosis) (pl. -noses /-si:z/) 1 an association of different organisms forming a community. 2 the relationship existing between such organisms. □ biocoenology /-'nɒlədʒı/ n. biocoenotic /-'nɒtık/ adj. [mod.L f. BIO- + Gk koinōsis sharing f. koinos common] biodegradable /ˌbaıəʊdı'greıdəb(ə)l/ adj. capable of being decomposed by bacteria or other living organisms. □ biodegradability /-ˌgreıdə'bılıtı/ n. biodegradation /-ˌdegrə'deıʃ(ə)n/ n.

biodiversity /ˌbaıəʊdaı'vɜ:sıtı/ n. diversity of plant and animal life.

bioenergetics /ˌbaıəʊˌenə'dʒetıks/ n. the study of the transformation of energy in living organisms.

bioengineering /ˌbaɪəʊˌendʒɪˈnɪərɪŋ/ n. 1 the application of engineering techniques to biosynthetic processes. 2 the use of artificial tissues, organs, or organ components to replace damaged or absent parts of the body, e.g. artificial limbs, heart pacemakers, etc. □ bioengineer n. & v.

bioethics /ˌbaɪəʊˈeθɪks/ n.pl. (treated as sing.) the ethics of medical and biological research. □ bioethicist /-ˈeθɪsɪst/ n.

biofeedback /ˌbaɪəʊˈfiːdbæk/ n. the technique of using the feedback of a normally automatic bodily response to a stimulus, in order to acquire voluntary control of that response.

bioflavonoid /ˌbaɪəʊˈfleɪvəˌnɔɪd/ n. Biochem. = CITRIN. [BIO- + flavonoid f. FLAVINE + -OID] biogas /ˈbaɪəʊˌgæs/ n. gaseous fuel, esp. methane, produced by fermentation of organic matter.

biogenesis /ˌbaɪəʊˈdʒenɪsɪs/ n. 1 the synthesis of substances by living organisms. 2 the hypothesis that a living organism arises only from another similar living organism. □ biogenetic /-dʒɪˈnetɪk/ adj.

biogenic /ˌbaɪəʊˈdʒenɪk/ adj. produced by living organisms.

biogeography /ˌbaɪəʊdʒɪˈɒgrəfɪ/ n. the scientific study of the geographical distribution of plants and animals. □ biogeographical /-ˌdʒiːəˈgræfɪk(ə)l/ adj.

biography /baɪˈogrəfɪ/ n. (pl. -ies) 1 a a written account of a person's life, usu. by another. b such writing as a branch of literature. 2 the course of a living (usu. human) being's life. □ biographer n. biographic /ˌbaɪəˈgræfɪk/ adj. biographical adj. biographically adv. [F biographie or mod.L biographia f. med.Gk] biohazard /ˈbaɪəʊˌhæzəd/ n. a risk to human health or the environment arising from biological work, esp. with micro-organisms.

Bioko /bɪˈəʊkəʊ/ an island of Equatorial Guinea, in the eastern part of the Gulf of Guinea. Its chief town is Malabo, the capital of Equatorial Guinea. It was known as Fernando Póo until 1973, and from 1973 to 1979 as Macias Nguema.

biological /ˌbaɪəˈlodʒɪk(ə)l/ adj. of or relating to biology or living organisms. □ biological clock an innate mechanism controlling the rhythmic physiological activities of an organism. biological control the control of a pest by the introduction of a natural enemy. biological warfare warfare involving the use of toxins or micro-organisms. □ biologically adv.

biology /baɪˈɒlədʒɪ/ n. 1 the science of life. (See note below.) 2 living organisms or life processes collectively. □ biologist n. [F biologie f. G Biologie (as BIO-, -LOGY)]

▪ Biology is an immensely broad subject, divisible into many specialized fields, and covering the morphology, physiology, anatomy, behaviour, origin, and distribution of living organisms. The word biology was coined in the 19th century.

bioluminescence /ˌbaɪəʊˌluːmɪˈnes(ə)ns/ n. the emission of light by living organisms such as the firefly. □ bioluminescent adj.

biomass /ˈbaɪəʊˌmæs/ n. the total quantity or weight of organisms in a given area or volume. [BIO- + MASS[1]] biomathematics /ˌbaɪəʊˌmæθəˈmætɪks/ n. the science of the application of mathematics to biology.

biome /ˈbaɪəʊm/ n. 1 a large naturally occurring community of flora and fauna adapted to the particular conditions in which they occur, e.g. tundra. 2 the geographical region containing such a community. [BIO- + -OME] biomechanics /ˌbaɪəʊmɪˈkænɪks/ n. the study of the mechanical laws relating to the movement or structure of living organisms.

biomedical /ˌbaɪəʊˈmedɪk(ə)l/ adj. of or relating to both biology and medicine. □ biomedicine n.

biometry /baɪˈɒmɪtrɪ/ n. (also biometrics /ˌbaɪəʊˈmetrɪks/) the application of statistical analysis to biological data. □ biometric /ˌbaɪəʊˈmetrɪk/ adj. biometrical adj. biometrician /ˌbaɪəʊmɪˈtrɪʃ(ə)n/ n. biometricist /ˌbaɪəʊˈmetrɪsɪst/ n.

biomorph /ˈbaɪəʊˌmɔːf/ n. a decorative form based on a living organism. □ biomorphic /ˌbaɪəʊˈmɔːfɪk/ adj. [BIO- + Gk morphē form] bionic /baɪˈɒnɪk/ adj. 1 having artificial body parts or the superhuman powers resulting from these. 2 relating to bionics. □ bionically adv. [BIO- after ELECTRONIC] bionics /baɪˈɒnɪks/ n.pl. (treated as sing.) the study of mechanical systems that function like living organisms or parts of living organisms.

bionomics /ˌbaɪəˈnɒmɪks/ n.pl. (treated as sing.) the study of the mode of life of organisms in their natural habitat and their adaptations to their surroundings; ecology. □ bionomic adj. [BIO- after ECONOMICS] biophysics /ˌbaɪəʊˈfɪzɪks/ n.pl. (treated as sing.) the science of the physical properties of living organisms and their constituents, and the investigation of biological phenomena in general by means of the techniques of modern physics. □ biophysical adj. biophysicist n.

biopic /ˈbaɪəʊˌpɪk/ n. colloq. a biographical film.

biopsy /ˈbaɪopsɪ/ n. (pl. -ies) Med. the examination of tissue removed from a living body to discover the presence, cause, or extent of a disease. [F biopsie f. Gk bios life + opsis sight, after necropsy] biorhythm /ˈbaɪəʊˌrɪðəm/ n. 1 any of the recurring cycles of biological processes thought to affect a person's emotional, intellectual, and physical activity. 2 any periodic change in the behaviour or physiology of an organism. □ biorhythmic /ˌbaɪəʊˈrɪðmɪk/ adj. biorhythmically adv.

biosphere /ˈbaɪəʊˌsfɪə(r)/ n. the regions of the earth's crust and atmosphere occupied by living organisms. Also called ecosphere. [G Biosphäre (as BIO-, SPHERE)] biosynthesis /ˌbaɪəʊˈsɪnθɪsɪs/ n. the production of organic molecules by living organisms. □ biosynthetic /-sɪnˈθetɪk/ adj.

biota /baɪˈəʊtə/ n. the animal and plant life of a region. [mod.L: cf. Gk biotē life] biotechnology /ˌbaɪəʊtekˈnɒlədʒɪ/ n. the exploitation of biological processes for industrial and other purposes, esp. genetic manipulation of micro-organisms (for the production of antibiotics, hormones, etc.).

bioterrorism /baɪəʊˈterəˌrɪʒ(ə)m/ n. the use of harmful biochemical or biological substances as weapons of terrorism. □ bioterrorist n.

biotic /baɪˈɒtɪk/ adj. 1 relating to life or to living things. 2 of biological origin. [F biotique or LL bioticus f. Gk biōtikos f. bios life] biotin /ˈbaɪətɪn/ n. a vitamin of the B complex, found in egg yolk, liver, and yeast, and involved in the metabolism of carbohydrates, fats, and proteins. Also called (esp. US) vitamin H. [G f. Gk bios life + -IN] biotite /ˈbaɪəˌtaɪt/ n. Mineral. a black, dark brown, or green micaceous mineral occurring as a constituent of metamorphic and igneous rocks. [J. B. Biot, Fr. physicist (1774–1862)] bipartisan /ˌbaɪpɑːtɪˈzæn, baɪˈpɑːtɪz(ə)n/ adj. of or involving two (esp. political) parties. □ bipartisanship n.

bipartite /baɪˈpɑːtaɪt/ adj. 1 consisting of two parts. 2 shared by or involving two parties. 3 Law (of a contract, treaty, etc.) drawn up in two corresponding parts or between two parties. [L bipartitus f. bipartire (as BI-, partire PART)] biped /ˈbaɪped/ n. & adj. ● n. a two-footed animal. ● adj. two-footed. □ bipedal /baɪˈpiːd(ə)l, -ˈped(ə)l/ adj. [L bipes -edis (as BI-, pes pedis foot)] bipinnate /baɪˈpɪneɪt/ adj. Bot. (of a pinnate leaf) having leaflets that are further subdivided in a pinnate arrangement.

biplane /ˈbaɪpleɪn/ n. an early type of aeroplane having two sets of wings, one above the other.

bipolar /baɪˈpəʊlə(r)/ adj. having two poles or extremities. □ bipolarity /ˌbaɪpəʊˈlærɪtɪ/ n.

birch /bɜːtʃ/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a hardy tree or shrub of the genus Betula, having thin peeling bark, bearing catkins, and found predominantly in northern temperate regions. 2 (in full birchwood) the hard fine-grained pale wood of this. 3 (in full birch-rod) a bundle of birch twigs used for flogging. ● v.tr. beat with a birch (in sense 3). □ birch-bark 1 the bark of Betula papyrifera used to make canoes. 2 N. Amer. such a canoe. □ birchen adj. [OE bi(e)rce f. Gmc]

bird /bɜːd/ n. 1 a feathered vertebrate with a beak, two wings and two feet, egg-laying and usu. able to fly. (See note below.) 2 a game bird. 3 Brit. sl. a young woman. 4 colloq. a person (a wily old bird). 5 sl. a a prison. b rhyming sl. a prison sentence (short for birdlime = time). □ bird-bath a basin in a garden etc. with water for birds to bathe in. bird-call 1 a bird's natural call. 2 an instrument imitating this. bird cherry a wild cherry, Prunus padus. bird-fancier a person who knows about, collects, breeds, or deals in, birds. a bird in the hand something secured or certain. the bird is (or has) flown the prisoner, quarry, etc., has escaped. bird- (or birds'-) nesting hunting for birds' nests, usu. to get eggs. bird of paradise a bird of the family Paradiseidae, found chiefly in New Guinea, the males having brilliantly coloured and showy plumage. bird of passage 1 a migrant. 2 any transient visitor. bird of prey see PREY. bird sanctuary an area where birds are protected and encouraged to breed. the birds and the bees euphem. sexual activity and reproduction. bird's-eye n. 1 a plant with small bright round flowers, e.g. the germander speedwell. 2 a pattern with many small spots. ● adj. of or having small bright round flowers (bird's-eye primrose). bird's-eye view a general view from above. bird's-foot (pl. bird's-foots) a plant having a part resembling the foot of a bird; esp. a vetch of the genus Ornithopus, having claw-shaped pods. bird's-foot trefoil a small leguminous plant, Lotus corniculatus, with yellow flowers streaked with red (also called eggs and bacon, tom thumb). bird's nest soup soup made (esp. in Chinese cookery) from the dried gelatinous coating of the nests of swifts of the genus Aerodramus. birds of a feather people of like character. bird-strike a collision between a bird and an aircraft. bird table a raised platform on which food for birds is placed. bird-watcher a person who observes birds in their natural surroundings. bird-watching this occupation. for (or strictly for) the birds colloq. trivial, uninteresting. get the bird sl. 1 be dismissed. 2 be hissed at or booed. like a bird without difficulty or hesitation. a little bird an unnamed informant. [OE brid, of unkn. orig.]

- The earliest known fossil bird, Archaeopteryx, clearly shows the close relationship of birds to the small dinosaurs from which they were descended (see ARCHAEOPTERYX). Modern birds, of which there are about 8,600 living species, are comparatively uniform as regards their anatomical structure. Their bones are often hollow for the sake of lightness. They are warm-blooded, and feathers probably first evolved as an insulating layer to help conserve body heat. Birds are primarily diurnal animals, with good colour vision, good hearing, and a poor sense of smell. They exhibit complex social and migratory behaviour, and show advanced care of the young, but are considered to behave more instinctively and with less ability to adapt than mammals.

birdcage /ˈbɜːdkeɪdʒ/ n. 1 a cage for birds usu. made of wire or cane. 2 an object of a similar design.

Bismarck^{1} /ˈbɪzmɑːk/ the state capital of North Dakota; pop. (1990) 49,256. A terminus of the Northern Pacific Railway, it took the name of the German Chancellor in order to attract German capital for railroad building.

Bismarck^{2} /ˈbɪzmɑːk/, Otto (Eduard Leopold) von, Prince of Bismarck, Duke of Lauenburg (known as 'the Iron Chancellor') (1815–98), German statesman. As Minister-President and Foreign Minister of Prussia under Wilhelm I from 1862, Bismarck was the driving force behind the unification of Germany, orchestrating wars with Denmark (1864), Austria (1866), and France (1870–1) in order to achieve this end. As Chancellor of the new German Empire (1871–90), he continued to dominate the political scene, attempting to break the influence of the Catholic Church at home (see KULTURKAMPF) while consolidating Germany's position as a European power by creating a system of alliances. Bismarck was forced to resign in 1890 after a policy disagreement with Wilhelm II.

Bizet /'bi:zeɪ/, Georges (born Alexandre César Léopold Bizet) (1838–75), French composer. Although his first major work was the Symphony in C major (1855), this was not performed until 1933, and it was as an operatic composer that he strove to make his reputation. Critical acclaim was largely unforthcoming during his lifetime, but The Pearl Fishers (1863) and Carmen (1875) have since gained considerable popularity; the latter, based on a story by the French novelist Prosper Mérimée (1803–70), is regarded as Bizet's masterpiece.

black body n. Physics a hypothetical perfect absorber and radiator of energy, with no reflecting power. An important theoretical concept, such an object emits electromagnetic radiation whose spectrum shows a peak in intensity at a wavelength inversely proportional to its absolute temperature. This effect is illustrated by a red-hot metal bar changing through yellow to white-hot as it gets hotter; real objects at high temperatures, such as stars, approximate quite closely to black bodies. The correct description of black-body radiation was an early triumph of Max Planck's quantum theory.

black hole n. 1 Astron. a region in space with a gravitational field so intense that no matter or radiation can escape. (See note below.) 2 a place of confinement for punishment, esp. in the armed services.

▪ Black holes are probably formed when a massive star exhausts its nuclear fuel and collapses under its own gravity. If the star is massive enough, no known force can counteract the increasing gravity, and it will collapse to a point of infinite density. Before this stage is reached, within a certain radius (the event horizon) light itself becomes trapped and the object becomes invisible. It is speculated that black holes of millions of solar masses may lurk at the centre of some galaxies, swallowing passing stars and increasing in mass. Such objects may fuel the enormous radiation of energy from quasars.

blast-furnace /ˈblɑːstˌfɜːnɪs/ n. a smelting-furnace which uses a blast of compressed hot air. The blast-furnace is the major means of smelting iron ore to produce molten iron. It consists of a tall steel tower, lined internally with a refractory material. The furnace is charged from the top with a mixture of iron ore, coke, and limestone. Hot air is blown into the base of the tower through nozzles. The oxygen in the air reacts with carbon in the coke to produce carbon monoxide, which in turn combines with oxygen from the iron ore to produce carbon dioxide and pure iron. As the carbon dioxide passes up the tower it reacts with carbon to produce more carbon monoxide, and the cycle is repeated. The limestone combines with ash from the coke to form a liquid slag, which absorbs sulphur in the iron and collects at the bottom of the tower, floating above a pool of molten iron. The iron and the slag are tapped off separately from time to time. The exhaust gases are used to preheat the incoming blast of air and then as fuel for raising steam to drive the air compressors or to heat the coke-ovens. The whole process is therefore a well-integrated method of producing iron continuously on a large scale.

- Most animals depend on a circulating fluid for transporting substances from one part of the body to another. In vertebrates this fluid is blood, which carries food, salts, oxygen, hormones, and cells and molecules of the immune system to tissues, and removes waste products; by virtue of its large volume and rapid circulation it evens out the temperature of the bodily parts. Blood consists of a mildly alkaline aqueous fluid (plasma) containing red cells (erythrocytes), white cells (leucocytes), and platelets; it is red when oxygenated and purple when deoxygenated. Red blood cells carry the protein haemoglobin, which gives blood its colour and can combine with oxygen, thus enabling the blood to carry oxygen from the lungs to the tissues. Carbon dioxide is carried in the reverse direction, mainly as bicarbonate ions. White blood cells protect the body against the invasion of foreign agents (e.g. bacteria). Platelets and other factors present in plasma are concerned in the clotting of blood, preventing haemorrhage.

▪ The blues developed in the rural southern US towards the end of the 19th century, mixing work songs with African and white folk elements. The first blues was published in 1912, 'Memphis Blues' by W. C. Handy (1873–1958), an Alabaman who did much to standardize the genre's form. Early blues singers were frequently itinerant, travelling around the South and accompanying themselves on guitar or piano. Blues began to find a wider audience in the 1940s, as blacks migrated north to the cities, especially Chicago, and formed groups incorporating a rhythm section and amplified instruments. Famous blues singers of this period include Bessie Smith and Billie Holiday; later figures include Muddy Waters and B. B. King. This urban blues gave rise to rhythm and blues and rock and roll and ultimately to much of today's popular music. In the 1960s blues found a new young audience when cover versions of songs by early performers were produced by white groups such as the Rolling Stones.

bluestocking /'blu:ˌstɒkɪŋ/ n. usu. derog. an intellectual or literary woman. The term is derived from a social group formed in London in 1750 by three women (Hannah More, Elizabeth Montagu, and Elizabeth Carter) for literary discussions, in which eminent men of letters often also took part. Many of these favoured informal dress, and the wearing by one man (Benjamin Stillingfleet) of grey or 'blue' worsted stockings instead of formal black silk led to the group's being known as the Blue Stocking Club.

Boas /ˈbəʊæz/, Franz (1858–1942), German-born American anthropologist. A pioneer of modern anthropology, he developed the linguistic and cultural components of ethnology. Against the trend of contemporary theory he drew attention to the subjective nature of previous studies, pointing out how they were based on a Western cultural viewpoint. Instead he insisted that cultural development must be explored by means of field studies reconstructing histories of particular cultures. He did much to overturn the theory that Nordic peoples constitute an essentially superior race; his writings were burnt by the Nazis. His works include Race, Language, and Culture (1940).

Boer /bɔ:(r), 'bəʊə(r), bʊə(r)/ n. any of the early Dutch or Huguenot inhabitants of southern Africa or their descendants, esp. one of the early settlers of Transvaal or Orange Free State. Immigration took place chiefly 1652–1700, the rise in population thereafter being largely by natural increase. Calvinist by religion, the Boers developed their own fiercely self-sufficient lifestyle, many becoming wandering farmers, and by the late 18th century their own language, Afrikaans, had evolved from Dutch. Opposition to the British administration after Cape Colony became British in 1806 led eventually to the Great Trek of 1835–7 and the Boer Wars. After the defeat of the Boers in the Second Boer War in 1902, Transvaal and Orange Free State ceased to be independent Boer republics. South Africans of Dutch descent are today usually called Afrikaners. [Du.: see BOOR]

Boer War either of two wars fought by Great Britain in southern Africa. The first (1880–1) began with the revolt of the Boer settlers in Transvaal against British rule and ended after the British defeat at Majuba Hill with the establishment of an independent Boer Republic under British suzerainty. The second (1899–1902) was caused by the Boer refusal to grant equal rights to recent British immigrants and by the imperialist ambitions of Cecil Rhodes and some Conservative politicians. In the early stages of the war the Boers gained a series of remarkable victories, but after the arrival of Roberts and Kitchener the British succeeded in capturing the Boer capital Pretoria and driving the Boer leader Kruger into exile. The second half of the war was dominated by guerrilla warfare, the British victory eventually being obtained through the use of almost half a million British and imperial troops and the employment of concentration camps to control the countryside.

Boethius /bəʊ'iːθɪəs/, Anicius Manlius Severinus (*c.*480–524), Roman statesman and philosopher. He is best known for The Consolation of Philosophy, a work written in a mixture of prose and verse while he was in prison for treason. In this he argued that the soul can attain happiness in affliction by realizing the value of goodness and meditating on the reality of God. While drawing upon Stoicism and Neoplatonism, his work echoed Christian sentiments and exercised considerable influence throughout the Middle Ages.

Bohr /bɔː(r)/, Niels Hendrik David (1885–1962), Danish physicist and pioneer in quantum physics. Bohr's theory of the structure of the atom incorporated quantum theory for the first time and is the basis for present-day quantum-mechanical models. In 1927 he proposed the principle of complementarity, which accounted for the paradox of regarding subatomic particles both as waves and as particles. In the 1930s Bohr fled from Nazi persecution, escaping from German-occupied Denmark in 1943 and helping to develop the atom bomb, first in Britain and then in the US. He later became concerned about the implications of atomic weapons and stressed the need to study the peaceful applications of atomic energy. Niels Bohr was awarded the 1922 Nobel Prize for physics; his son, Aage Niels Bohr (b.1922), shared the 1975 Prize for his studies of the physics of the atomic nucleus.

Bosnia–Herzegovina /ˌbɒznɪəˌheətsəˈgɒvɪnə, -gəˈviːnə/ (also Bosnia and Herzegovina) a country in the Balkans, formerly a constituent republic of Yugoslavia; pop. (est. 1991) 4,365,000; capital, Sarajevo. Settled by Slavs in the 7th century, Bosnia and Herzegovina were conquered by the Turks in 1463. The province of Bosnia-Herzegovina came under Austrian control in 1878 and was annexed in 1908, an event which contributed towards the outbreak of the First World War. In 1918, it became part of the Kingdom of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, which changed its name to Yugoslavia in 1929. In 1992 Bosnia–Herzegovina followed Slovenia and Croatia in declaring independence, but ethnic conflict amongst Muslims, Serbs, and Croats created a state of civil war and UN peacekeeping forces were deployed to prevent further advances by Bosnian Serb forces, which controlled more than half of Bosnian territory. In 1994 Bosnian Muslims and Croats reached an accord establishing a federation. In 1995, after negotiations in the US, the presidents of Bosnia, Croatia, and Serbia signed a peace agreement which effectively divided Bosnia into separate self-governing parts, the Muslim–Croat Federation and the Bosnian Serb Republic. (See also HERZEGOVINA.)

- The study of plants has a long history: Theophrastus (*c.*300 BC) wrote about their form and function, and they remained of interest thereafter, especially because of their medicinal properties. John Ray produced the first systematic account of English flora, and Linnaeus devised a system for naming and classifying plants which is still used (in modified form) today. Study of plant anatomy developed in the 17th century, and of plant physiology a century later, with important advances such as the discovery of photosynthesis. Modern botany has contributed much to agriculture and horticulture with discoveries such as plant hormones, systematic breeding techniques, and advances in plant biology and pathology.

Botany Bay an inlet of the Tasman Sea in New South Wales, Australia, just south of Sydney. It was the site of Captain James Cook's landing in 1770 and of an early British penal settlement. Cook named the bay after the large variety of plants collected there by his companion, Sir Joseph Banks.

Botha^{1} /ˈbəʊtə/, Louis (1862–1919), South African soldier and statesman, first Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa 1910–19. One of the most successful Boer leaders in the Boer War, Botha became Commander-in-Chief in 1900 and waged guerrilla warfare against the British forces. As Transvaal's first Prime Minister he played a leading role in the National Convention (1908–9), which was responsible for drafting the constitution for the Union of South Africa; he became its Prime Minister a year later. Botha supported the Allies in the First World War, gaining recognition for his annexation of German South West Africa in 1915.

Botha^{2} /ˈbəʊtə/, P(ieter) W(illem) (b.1916), South African statesman, Prime Minister 1978–84, State President 1984–9. He joined the National Party in 1936 and was involved in party organization, particularly in Cape Province, until his election as Prime Minister in 1978. He abolished the office of Prime Minister in 1984, replacing it with that of State President. An authoritarian leader, he continued to enforce apartheid, but in response to pressure introduced limited reforms, including a new constitution (1984) giving certain classes of non-whites a degree of political representation. His resistance to more radical change ultimately led to his fall from power.

Botham /ˈbəʊθəm/, Ian (Terence) (b.1955), English all-round cricketer. ▪ Bowling as an indoor game is of great antiquity. Similar games were played in ancient Egypt. In Germany, congregations played at bowling in church cloisters (*c.*1400) and from there the game spread to Britain and the rest of Europe. It was taken to America by Dutch settlers in the 17th century, when the target consisted of nine pins; a tenth pin was later added, and it is in this form that bowling has became a popular social activity, especially in the US. In 1895 the American Bowling Congress codified the rules and standardized the equipment.

bowls /bəʊlz/ n. a game played with heavy wooden bowls, the object of which is to propel one's bowl so that it comes to rest as close as possible to a previously bowled small white ball (the jack) without touching it. Bowls is played chiefly out of doors (though indoor bowls is also popular) on a closely trimmed lawn (the green). An intentional imbalance (bias) of balls was introduced in the 16th century, greatly increasing the tactical scope of the game by allowing balls to run in curved paths round obstructions. Bowls is one of the oldest games known in Britain, being first recorded in the late 13th century; it is popularly associated with the story of Sir Francis Drake refusing to allow the sighting of the Spanish Armada to interrupt his game of bowls. The modern rules for bowls were drawn up in the mid-19th century.

boxing /ˈbɒksɪŋ/ n. the practice of fighting with the fists, esp. in padded gloves in a roped square, as a sport. (See note below.) □ boxing glove a heavily padded glove used in boxing.

▪ Boxing is a sport of great antiquity. It was popular in ancient Greece, being mentioned in Homer and depicted in Minoan wall-paintings. The Romans added metal weights to the leather thongs with which the boxers' fists were bound. In the 18th century, prize fighting with bare fists was popular, often for large amounts of money with huge side bets. The modern rules of boxing were codified by the Marquess of Queensberry (1844–1900) in 1865 and are named the Queensberry Rules after him. They include the use of boxing gloves, the division of fights into a set number of short, usually three-minute rounds, banning of gouging and wrestling, and a count of ten seconds before a boxer who has been knocked down is declared the loser. Contestants are divided into categories according to their weight. Professional contests generally last for ten or twelve rounds; amateur contests are normally fought over three rounds, a ruling which tends to emphasize skill and speed more than strength and stamina.

Bradbury^1 /ˈbrædbərɪ/, Sir Malcolm (Stanley) (1932–2000), English novelist, critic, and academic. His first three novels (including The History Man, 1975) were satires of university campus life; Rates of Exchange (1983) recounted the experiences of an academic on a lecture tour of an eastern European country. His critical works included studies of Evelyn Waugh (1962) and Saul Bellow (1982).

Bradbury^2 /ˈbrædbərɪ/, Ray (Douglas) (b.1920), American writer of science fiction. He is best known for his collections of short stories, such as The Martian Chronicles (1950) and The Golden Apples of the Sun (1953). His novels include Fahrenheit 451 (1951), a depiction of a future totalitarian state.

Bradford /ˈbrædfəd/ an industrial city in West Yorkshire, England; pop. (1991) 289,376. It was noted for the production of woollen cloth until the decline of the textile industry in the 1970s.

Bradley /ˈbrædlɪ/, James (1693–1762), English astronomer. Bradley was appointed Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford in 1721 and Astronomer Royal in 1742. His attempt to measure the distance of stars by means of stellar parallax resulted in his discovery of the aberration of light, which he ascribed correctly to the combined effect of the velocity of light and the earth's annual orbital motion. He also observed the oscillation of the earth's axis, which he termed nutation. His star catalogue was published posthumously.

Bradman /ˈbrædmən/, Sir Donald George ('Don') (1908–2001), Australian cricketer. An outstanding batsman who dominated the sport in his day, he began his career in 1927 with New South Wales and played for his country from 1928 until his retirement in 1948. He scored 117 centuries in first-class cricket, twenty-nine of them in test matches; he holds the record for the highest Australian test score against England (334 at Leeds in 1930). His test match batting average of 99.94 is well above that of any other cricketer of any era.

Bragg /bræg/, Sir William Henry (1862–1942), English physicist, a founder of solid-state physics. His early work was concerned with X-rays and ionizing radiation, but in 1912 he began to collaborate with his son, Sir (William) Lawrence Bragg (1890–1971), in developing the technique of X-ray diffraction for determining the atomic structure of crystals; for this they shared the 1915 Nobel Prize for physics. He later established a research school for crystallography at University College, London, and became director of the Royal Institution in 1923. His son was appointed head of the same establishment in 1953. Their diffraction studies of organic crystals were of fundamental importance in molecular biology.

braggadocio /ˌbrægəˈdəʊtʃɪˌəʊ, -ˈdəʊʃɪˌəʊ/ n. empty boasting; a boastful manner of speech and behaviour. [Braggadochio, a braggart in Spenser's Faerie Queene, f. BRAG or BRAGGART + It. augment. suffix -occio]

Brahe /ˈbrɑːhɪ, ˈbrɑːə/, Tycho (1546–1601), Danish astronomer. A nobleman, he built his own observatory, which he equipped with new instruments for determining planetary motions and star positions with great precision, making due allowance for atmospheric refraction. He was regarded as the leading observational astronomer of his day; his observations of comets, published in the book De Nova Stella (1577), demonstrated that they followed regular sun-centred paths, but despite this he adhered to a geocentric picture of the orbits of the planets. A 'new star' which he observed in 1572 is now known to have been a supernova. From the 1590s, he corresponded with Kepler, who later assisted him in his work.

Brahma /ˈbrɑːmə/ Hinduism the creator god, who forms a triad with Vishnu and Siva. Brahma was an important god of late Vedic religion, but has been little worshipped since the 5th century AD and has only one major temple dedicated to him in India today. [Skr. brahma (nom. of brahman) priest]

Brahms /brɑːmz/, Johannes (1833–97), German composer and pianist. He lived for most of the last thirty-five years of his life in Vienna and owed much of his early success to the friendship and patronage of Schumann, whom he first met in 1853. Firmly opposed to the 'New German' school of Liszt and the young Wagner, he eschewed programme music and opera and concentrated his energies on 'pure' and traditional forms. He wrote four symphonies, two piano concertos, a violin concerto (1879) and the Double Concerto (1887), chamber and piano music, choral works including the German Requiem (1857–68), and nearly 200 songs.

[OE brægen f. WG]

- The human brain consists of three main parts. (i) The forebrain, greatly developed into the cerebrum, consists of two hemispheres joined by a bridge of nerve fibres, and is responsible for the exercise of thought and control of speech. Its wrinkled surface or cortex is coated with nerve cells, which appear grey in contrast to the white of the deeper nerve-fibres. Embedded in it are the thalamus and the hypothalamus, the latter being concerned with the regulation of temperature and water balance, with hunger, thirst, emotions, and the sex drive. The left half of the cerebrum is associated with the right side of the body, regulating its posture and movements and appreciation of bodily sensations, and the right half with the left side. The functions of most of the cerebral cortex, the nature of the physical embodiment of memory and of consciousness itself, remain unknown. (ii) The midbrain, the upper part of the tapering brain-stem, contains cells concerned in eye-movements. (iii) The hindbrain, the lower part of the brain stem, contains cells responsible for breathing and for regulating heart action, the flow of digestive juices, etc. The cerebellum, which lies behind the brain stem, plays an important role in the execution of highly skilled movements. The brain of other vertebrates is similar but less developed in some respects; in invertebrates a collection of ganglia has an analogous function.

Bramah /ˈbræmə/, Joseph (1748–1814), English inventor. One of the most influential engineers of the Industrial Revolution, Bramah is best known for his hydraulic press, used for heavy forging; he also patented a successful lock. His other inventions included milling and planing machines and other machine tools, a beer-engine, a machine for numbering banknotes, and a water-closet.

Bramante /bræˈmæntɪ/, Donato (di Angelo) (1444–1514), Italian architect. Strongly influenced by the architecture of ancient Rome, his work often typifies the Renaissance spirit striving for the ideal of classical perfection as exemplified by the Tempietto in the cloister of S. Pietro in Montorio (1502). As architect to Pope Julius II he designed works at the Vatican as well as the new St Peter's (begun in 1506); his floor-plan for the latter, in the form of a Greek cross crowned with a central dome, was the starting-point for subsequent work on the basilica.

Brancusi /bræŋˈku:zɪ/, Constantin (1876–1957), Romanian sculptor, who spent much of his working life in France. His sculpture represents an attempt to move away from a representational art and to capture the essence of forms by reducing them to their ultimate, almost abstract, simplicity. His subjects, often executed in marble and polished bronze, were frequently repeated and refined several times in his quest for simplicity, as can be seen in his series of twenty-eight 'bird' sculptures (*c.*1911–36). Brancusi's influence on modern sculpture is particularly apparent in the work of Jacob Epstein and Barbara Hepworth.

Brecht /brext/, (Eugen) Bertolt (Friedrich) (1898–1956), German dramatist, producer, and poet. His interest in combining music and drama led to a number of successful collaborations with Kurt Weill, the first of these being The Threepenny Opera (1928), an adaptation of John Gay's The Beggar's Opera. In his later drama, which was written in exile after Hitler's rise to power and includes Mother Courage (1941) and The Caucasian Chalk Circle (1948), Brecht experimented with his ideas of a Marxist 'epic theatre' with its 'alienation effect', whereby theatrical illusion is controlled and the audience is confronted with the real political issues at stake.

Breton¹ /ˈbret(ə)n, French brətɔ̃/ n. & adj. ● n. 1 a native of Brittany. 2 the language of the Bretons, belonging to the Brythonic branch of the Celtic language group. (See note below.) ● adj. of or relating to Brittany or its people or language. [OF, = BRITON]

- Breton is the only Celtic language now spoken on the European mainland, representing the modern development of the language brought from Cornwall in the 5th and 6th centuries by Britons fleeing from the Saxon invaders. Until the 20th century Breton was widely spoken in Brittany, but official encouragement of the use of French has contributed to its decline. Recently attempts have been made to revive its use in Brittany, but although it is taught in some schools its use is rare in the younger generation; some 500,000 are thought to use it on an everyday basis.

Breton² /ˈbret(ə)n, French brətɔ̃/, André (1896–1966), French poet, essayist, and critic. Influenced by the work of Sigmund Freud and the poet Paul Valéry, Breton was first involved with Dadaism, co-founding the movement's review Littérature in 1919. When Dada collapsed in the early 1920s, Breton launched the surrealist movement; its chief theorist, he first outlined the movement's philosophy in his manifesto of 1924. His creative writing is characterized by surrealist techniques such as 'automatic' writing and the startling juxtaposition of images, as in his famous poetic novel Nadja (1928).

Gmc]

▪ The main types of bridge are the girder, arch, suspension, cantilever, and drawbridge or bascule. The simplest and oldest type consists of a straight beam or girder placed across a span; variants of this survive in the Dartmoor clapper bridges, and in China, where granite slabs of up to 200 metric tons in weight and 21 m (70 ft) long were used.

Although the masonry arch was developed in China in the 4th millennium BC, it was the Romans who first used the semicircular arch extensively, building many bridges, such as the Pont du Gard aqueduct, that remain in use today. With increasing confidence, medieval and Renaissance engineers built arches with lower rise than the semicircle and coped with the resulting increased thrust on the abutment; these can be seen, for example, in the remaining elliptical arches of the bridge at Avignon (1171) and the segmented arches of the Ponte Vecchio in Florence (1345). In 1779 the Coalbrookdale bridge in Shropshire heralded a new era of iron and steel arch bridges: several, including the Sydney Harbour Bridge (1932), have spans of over 500 m (1640 ft).

The suspension bridge in its primitive form, widespread geographically, consists of three ropes hanging from anchorages on each side, forming walkway and handrailing. The Lan Chin bridge in China (AD 65) has iron chains supporting a wooden deck, but in the West iron chains were not used until the early 19th century, as in Telford's Menai Bridge (1819–26). Modern suspension bridges use parallel stranded wire ropes for the cables; famous examples include the Golden Gate Bridge near San Francisco (1937) and the Humber Bridge in England, which on its completion in 1980 had the world's longest single span (1410 m, 4626 ft).

The cantilever bridge, a refinement of the beam, has a central span supported on the ends of side-spans which are cantilevered out over piers, as in the Forth railway bridge in Scotland (1882–9) and the Quebec bridge (completed in 1917).

The medieval drawbridge, lowered and raised by ropes or chains to allow or prevent passage, finds its modern equivalent in designs using counterweights and gears to allow a bridge to be raised, e.g. to allow the passage of ships. London's Tower Bridge uses two bascules to span 61 m (200 ft).

bridge^{2} /brɪdʒ/ n. a card-game derived from whist, played by two partnerships of two players who at the beginning of each hand bid for the right to name the trump suit, the highest bid also representing a contract to make a specified number of tricks. (See note below.) □ bridge roll a small soft bread roll. [19th c.: prob. of eastern Mediterranean origin]

▪ In bridge, the members of each pair sit opposite one another; one member of the partnership which made the highest bid has to play both his or her own hand as well as the exposed cards of his or her partner. The modern form of bridge, contract bridge, was developed mainly by the American player Ely Culbertson (1891–1955) and his associates on the basis of an earlier form, known as auction bridge, popular with the British in India in the 19th century. The principal features of contract bridge are a complex bidding system, including many conventions for indicating the strength and distribution of a hand, and a scoring system for the card play in which only tricks that were bid as well as won count towards game. The main form of competitive bridge for tournaments is duplicate bridge, in which the same pre-arranged hands are played independently by several pairs or teams.

bridgehead /ˈbrɪdʒhed/ n. Mil. a fortified position held on the enemy's side of a river or other obstacle.

Bridge of Sighs a 16th-century enclosed bridge in Venice between the Doges' Palace and the state prison, originally crossed by prisoners on their way to torture or execution. The name is also used for two similarly constructed bridges in Oxford and Cambridge.

Bridges /ˈbrɪdʒɪz/, Robert (Seymour) (1844–1930), English poet and literary critic. His long philosophical poem The Testament of Beauty (1929), written in the Victorian tradition, was instantly popular; he was Poet Laureate 1913–30. He also wrote two important critical essays, Milton's Prosody (1893) and John Keats (1895). He made an important contribution to literature in publishing his friend Gerard Manley Hopkins's poems in 1918.

Britain /ˈbrɪt(ə)n/ the island containing England, Wales, and Scotland, and including the small adjacent islands (see also GREAT BRITAIN). The name is broadly synonymous with Great Britain, but the longer form is more usual for the political unit. After the Old English period the name was only a historical term until the mid-16th century, when it was used politically in connection with the efforts made to unite England and Scotland. In 1604 James I was proclaimed 'King of Great Britain', and this name was adopted for the United Kingdom at the Union of the English and Scottish Parliaments in 1707. For a time after this the terms South Britain and North Britain, for England and Scotland respectively, were often used in Acts of Parliament. [13th c. Bretayne f. OF Bretaigne f. L Britannia (OE Breoton and variants)]

Britain, Battle of a series of air battles fought over Britain (Aug.–Oct. 1940), in which the RAF successfully resisted raids by the numerically superior German air force. The heavy losses sustained and the failure to establish control in the air led Hitler to abandon plans to invade Britain, although the Germans continued to bomb British cities by night for several months afterwards.

Britannia /brɪˈtænjə/ the personification of Britain, esp. as a helmeted woman with shield and trident. British Broadcasting Corporation (abbr. BBC) a public corporation having the monopoly of radio and television broadcasting in Britain until the introduction of the first commercial TV station in 1954. The BBC was established in 1927 by royal charter to carry on work previously performed by the private British Broadcasting Company. It is financed by the sale of television viewing licences rather than by revenue from advertising and has an obligation to remain impartial in its reporting. An influential figure was the first director-general, John Reith, under whom the world's first regular television service began in 1936 and the corporation's ethos of public-service broadcasting was instituted. Today the BBC operates two television channels (BBC1 and BBC2) and a radio network within the UK, and also runs the World Service, as well as exporting drama, documentary, and comedy programmes around the world.

British Empire British overseas possessions, from the late 17th to the mid-20th century, acquired for commercial, strategic, and territorial reasons. The colonization of North America started in the early 17th century, although the colonies south of Canada were lost in the War of American Independence. British domination of India began under the auspices of the East India Company, also in the 17th century, while a series of small colonies, mostly in the West Indies, were gained in colonial wars with France during the late 17th–early 19th centuries. Australia, New Zealand, and various possessions in the Far East (notably Hong Kong) were added in the 19th century, while large areas of Africa came under British control in the last few decades of the century, at the height of the imperialist age. The movement of the British colonies towards independence began in the mid-19th century with the granting of self-government to Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. This trend was accelerated by the two world wars, with most of the remaining colonies gaining independence in the decade and a half following the end of the Second World War.

Brontë /ˈbrɒnteɪ/, Charlotte (1816–55), Emily (1818–48), and Anne (1820–49), English novelists. Motherless and largely educated at home, the three sisters led a lonely childhood in the village of Haworth in a remote part of Yorkshire. Apart from work as governesses and, for Emily and Charlotte, a visit to Brussels, their experience of the outside world was unusually limited. All died young, Emily of tuberculosis after the publication (but before the success) of her masterpiece Wuthering Heights (1847). Anne also died of tuberculosis, after publishing Agnes Grey (1845) and The Tenant of Wildfell Hall (1847). Charlotte died during pregnancy, when she was already famous for her romantic tour-de-force Jane Eyre (1847) and for Shirley (1849) and Villette (1853). Their works were published under the pseudonyms Currer, Ellis, and Acton Bell. Of their early poetry, collected in Poems by Currer, Ellis and Acton Bell (1846), Emily's has been the most highly regarded.

It. bronzo, prob. f. Pers. birinj brass]

- Bronze was first smelted in the Near East, the Aegean, and the Balkans in the late 4th and early 3rd millennium BC. It is harder than pure copper and therefore superior for making weapons and tools. Until the introduction of iron, bronze remained the sole metal for utilitarian purposes, and afterwards it continued in general use to the end of antiquity for sculpture, many domestic objects, and (after the 5th century BC) for small-denomination coins. In more recent times it has continued to be used for coinage (the bronze coin was introduced into Britain in 1860); most so-called 'copper' coins are in fact bronze.

Bronze Age n. a period of prehistory when certain weapons and tools came to be made of bronze rather than stone, following the Stone Age and preceding the Iron Age (see PREHISTORY). It began in the Near East and SE Europe in the late 4th and early 3rd millennium BC and is associated with the first European civilizations, the spread of the wheel, and the establishment of far-reaching trade networks. It is equated with the beginnings of urban life in China (beginning *c.*2000 BC), but in America developed only in the final stages of some of the Meso-American civilizations (AD *c.*1000). In NW Europe the Bronze Age was unaccompanied by developments in civilized life but merely followed on from the Stone Age; in Africa and Australasia it did not appear at all. It ended in most areas with the general use of iron technology, in the 8th century BC in northern Europe and in the 5th century AD in China; in Greece and other Aegean countries it ended *c.*1200 BC with the start of a dark age.

Browning^{1} /ˈbraʊnɪŋ/, Elizabeth Barrett (1806–61), English poet. After first becoming known with The Seraphim (1838), she established her reputation with Poems (1844), which was so well received that she was seriously considered as a possible successor to Wordsworth as Poet Laureate. In 1845 Robert Browning began his passionate correspondence with her. The pair met and were secretly married the following year, eloping to Italy to escape the wrath of Barrett's domineering father. She is best known for the love poems Sonnets from the Portuguese (1850), the experimental verse novel Aurora Leigh (1857), and the posthumous Last Poems (1862).

Browning^{2} /ˈbraʊnɪŋ/, Robert (1812–89), English poet. In 1842 he established his name as a poet with the publication of Dramatic Lyrics, containing such poems as 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' and 'My Last Duchess'. Dramatic Romances and Lyrics (1845), which included 'Home Thoughts from Abroad', built on this success. In 1846 he eloped to Italy with Elizabeth Barrett, and a highly creative period followed: Men and Women (1855) and The Ring and the Book (1868–9), a series of dramatic monologues, were among the important works completed during this time.

Bruckner /ˈbrʊknə(r)/, Anton (1824–96), Austrian composer and organist. After dividing his time for several years between teaching and organ-playing, he turned to composition, writing ten symphonies between 1863 and his death, together with four masses and a Te Deum (1884). Bruckner was often persuaded by well-meaning friends to alter his scores; for the most part, though, editors have been able to trace his original intentions.

Bruegel /ˈbrɔɪg(ə)l/ (also Breughel, Brueghel), Pieter (*c.*1525–69), Flemish artist. Known as Pieter Bruegel the Elder, he joined the Antwerp guild in 1551, but produced the bulk of his famous work in Brussels, where he moved in 1563. He worked successfully in a variety of genres, including landscapes, religious allegories, and satires of peasant life. His major works include The Procession to Calvary (1564), The Blind Leading the Blind (1568), and The Peasant Dance (1568). Both of his sons also worked as painters, chiefly in Antwerp. Pieter ('Hell') Bruegel the Younger (1564–1638) is known primarily as a very able copyist of his father's work; he is also noted for his paintings of devils (hence his diabolic nickname). Jan ('Velvet') Bruegel (1568–1623) was a celebrated painter of flower, landscape, and mythological pictures.

Brunel^{1} /brʊˈnel/, Isambard Kingdom (1806–59), English engineer. Son of Sir Marc Isambard Brunel, he was equally versatile, designing the famous Clifton suspension bridge in Bristol (1829–30), then in 1833 becoming chief engineer of the Great Western Railway, for which he surveyed more than a thousand miles of line (originally laid with broad gauge track, which he favoured) and designed many engineering works. He turned to steamship construction with the Great Western (1838), the first successful transatlantic steamship. His Great Eastern (1858) remained the world's largest ship until 1899. A little-known but remarkable achievement was Brunel's design in 1855 of a prefabricated hospital for the Crimean War.

Brunel^{2} /brʊˈnel/, Sir Marc Isambard (1769–1849), French-born English engineer. He came to England in 1799 and persuaded the government to adopt his designs for mass-production machinery at Portsmouth dockyard, an early example of automation. He also designed other machines for woodworking, boot-making, knitting, and printing. A versatile civil engineer, he built bridges, landing stages, and the first tunnelling shield, which he used to construct the first tunnel under the Thames (1825–43).

Brunelleschi /ˌbru:nəˈleskɪ/, Filippo (born Filippo di Ser Brunellesco) (1377–1446), Italian architect. The most famous Florentine architect of the 15th century, he is especially noted for the dome of Florence cathedral (1420–61), which he raised, after the fashion of ancient Roman construction, without the use of temporary supports. It is the largest dome in the world in diameter and inspired Michelangelo's design for St Peter's in Rome. Brunelleschi revived Roman architectural forms and is also often credited with the Renaissance 'discovery' of perspective.

Burma /ˈbɜːmə/ (official name Myanmar) a country in SE Asia, on the Bay of Bengal; pop. (est. 1991) 42,528,000; official language, Burmese; capital, Rangoon. An independent empire centred on the city of Pagan in the 11th–13th centuries, Burma fell to the Mongols and was generally split into small rival states until unified once again in 1757. As a result of the Burmese Wars of 1823–86, Burma was gradually annexed by the British, remaining under British administration until the Second World War. Occupied by the Japanese from 1942 to 1945, the country became an independent republic in 1948, choosing not to join the Commonwealth. In 1962 an army coup led by Ne Win overthrew the government and established an authoritarian state, which continued to maintain a policy of neutrality and limited foreign contact. The official name of the country was changed to the Union of Myanmar in 1989. In the late 1980s the pro-democracy movement gathered momentum, but following widespread demonstrations against the government in 1988 the army formally imposed military rule. The National League for Democracy (NLD) won the election held in May 1990, even though its leader Aung San Suu Kyi was under house arrest; however, the military regime did not relinquish power.

Burton^1 /'bɜːt(ə)n/, Richard (born Richard Jenkins) (1925–84), Welsh actor. He played a number of Shakespearian roles and performed in the radio adaptation of Dylan Thomas's Under Milk Wood (1954), before becoming well known in films such as The Spy Who Came in from the Cold (1966) and Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (1966). He often co-starred with Elizabeth Taylor (to whom he was twice married).

Burton^2 /'bɜːt(ə)n/, Sir Richard (Francis) (1821–90), English explorer, anthropologist, and translator. He joined the Indian Army in 1842; subsequent travels took him to Mecca disguised as a Pathan, and to Brazil, Damascus, and Trieste as consul. With John Hanning Speke, he became the first European to discover Lake Tanganyika (1858). As a translator, he is best known for his unexpurgated versions of the Arabian Nights (1885–8), the Kama Sutra (1883), The Perfumed Garden (1886), and other works of Arabian erotica. His interest in sexual behaviour and his detailed ethnographical notes led him often to risk prosecution under the Obscene Publications Act of 1857.

Burton-upon-Trent /ˌbɜːt(ə)nəpɒnˈtrent/ a town in west central England, in Staffordshire, on the River Trent to the north-east of Birmingham; pop. (1991) 60,525. The town is noted for its breweries.

Burundi /bʊˈrʊndɪ/ a central African country on the east side of Lake Tanganyika, to the south of Rwanda; pop. (est. 1991) 5,800,000; official languages, French and Kirundi; capital, Bujumbura. Inhabited mainly by Hutu and Tutsi peoples, the area formed part of German East Africa from the 1890s until the First World War, after which it was administered by Belgium. As in Rwanda, Belgium ruled through the Tutsi kings, institutionalizing the traditional power of the minority Tutsi in the region. The country became an independent monarchy in 1962 and a republic in 1966. Elections in 1993 resulted in the country being led for the first time by a member of the Hutu majority. However, he was assassinated within months, sparking ethnic violence; more fighting followed the death in 1994 of the country's next leader, together with the President of Rwanda. □ Burundian adj. & n.

Byron /ˈbaɪərən/, George Gordon, 6th Baron (1788–1824), English poet. His first literary success was Childe Harold's Pilgrimage (1812–18). In 1815 there were rumours of an incestuous relationship with his half-sister, his wife left him, and debts associated with his ancestral home increased. Ostracized and embittered, he left England permanently and stayed with Shelley in Geneva, finally settling in Italy. In Beppo (1818) he found a new ironic colloquial voice, which he fully developed in his epic satire Don Juan (1819–24). Though criticized on moral grounds, Byron's poetry exerted considerable influence on the romantic movement, particularly on the Continent. In 1824 he joined the fight for Greek independence, but died of malaria before seeing serious battle.

(See note below.) ● n. a citizen of Byzantium or the Eastern Roman Empire. □ Byzantinism n. Byzantinist n. [F byzantin or L Byzantinus f. Byzantium, later Constantinople and now Istanbul]

- Byzantine art and architecture spread beyond the Byzantine Empire into Italy, and long remained influential in Russia. Pictorial art, largely in the form of religious wall-paintings and icons, was characterized by clearly defined rules, heavily stylized figures depicted frontally and without depth, and much use of gold and other rich colours. The artists, generally monks, were expected to remain anonymous. Byzantine churches were often (with the exception of St Sophia in Constantinople, now Istanbul) comparatively small, but frequently featured sumptuous decoration, with interiors that made much use of marble panelling, mosaics, and wall-paintings. Domes supported by pendentives were a common feature.

Byzantine Empire the empire in SE Europe and Asia Minor formed from the eastern part of the Roman Empire (cf. EASTERN EMPIRE). The Roman Empire was divided in AD 395 by the Emperor Theodosius between his sons; Constantinople (Byzantium) became the capital of the Eastern Empire in 476, when Rome fell to the Ostrogoths. Justinian (emperor 527–65) reconquered North Africa and part of Italy, but by 750 the Byzantine Empire had been pushed back, mainly by Muslim Arab conquests, to the Balkans and Asia Minor. In 1054, theological and political differences between Constantinople and Rome led to a schism between Eastern and Western Christianity (see GREAT SCHISM 1). After the strong reign of Alexius Comnenus (1081–1118), the empire gradually declined under his dynastic successors. The loss of Constantinople to the Ottoman Turks in 1453 was the end of the empire, although its rulers held Trebizond (Trabzon) until 1461.

Byzantium /bɪˈzæntɪəm, baɪ-/ an ancient Greek city, founded in the 7th century BC, at the southern end of the Bosporus, site of the modern city of Istanbul. It was rebuilt by Constantine the Great in AD 324–30 as Constantinople.

- Although the monarchs of England always had advisers, the first Cabinet (or Cabinet Council) developed after the Restoration in 1660. It consisted of the most trusted members of the Privy Council and met with the monarch in a 'cabinet' or private room, taking decisions without consulting the full Privy Council. In the time of Queen Anne it became the main machinery of executive government, and the Privy Council was relegated to a formal and judicial role. From about 1717 the monarch ceased to attend, but it was not until after the Reform Act of 1832 that the royal power was dissolved and Cabinets came to depend for their existence and policies upon the support of a majority in the House of Commons.
